When at last he reached the top of the cliff he was panting and all but exhausted. Strong as he was, the woman in her wet clothing, with the child added, had been no light burden. But as he reached the top he felt the wind in his face. It had veered to westward. The fog was shifting and changing. A little more and he saw the stars. A little further and he could see in the distance the lights of his own farm.

He carried in the woman and child, and laid them down on Nance's clean sanded floor in front of the fire. Then he set out to look for a doctor.

When at length he came back, the woman and child, wrapped in blankets, were lying in the firelight. Old Nance, the widow and the daughter of fishermen, knew what to do in case of drowning. She and Simon were rubbing the child's little hands and feet.

"He's coming to," said Nance in a whisper. "He can't ha' been in the say very long. Her's drownded, fast enough!"

Michael gave one look at the child, a beautiful round plump child, with darkly clustering curls—not like an English child, more like the Child in the pictures Mr. Hurst had brought from abroad and hung up in the vicarage which some of the parishioners were inclined to regard as papistical. He strode over, after the glance at the child, to where the woman lay on a mattress on the floor, her hands meekly folded, her long hair laid either side of her bosom.

Why, the woman was beautiful—as beautiful as the child. A dark face of a Madonna sweetness, the olive colour of the south, the hair blue-black. He could only guess at the eyes under the shadowed lids. But she was beautiful—a round, soft, graceful shape under the blanket. Suddenly his heart began to bleed within him that anything so beautiful should be dead.

The door opened and the doctor came in. He knelt down beside the drowned woman, lifted one eyelid and looked at the eye, listened for the breathing, felt for the pulse, then, flinging off his coat, began to work like a madman.

Five full hours they worked, Michael Godwin and the doctor—fortunately he was a young doctor and zealous, or he might have given up earlier—before they were sure she breathed. A little more and the lips began to regain colour. By this time the child was asleep in Michael Godwin's old cradle of roughly carved oak, which had come down through many centuries. At last the drowned woman opened her eyes. They were like dark stars, so mournful and so splendid were they. She sighed lightly and the eyes closed again. She was asleep.

Michael Godwin had an hour or two of sleep, and awoke from a dream, in which Lizzie had been all he had thought her, and her children and his were playing on his floor o the sound of the child's laughter. He went down stairs with an unwonted sense of exhilaration, to find the child sitting in a high chair, being fed by old Nance, while Simon looked in at the open door, and Buller, lying on the hearth, thumping his tail as though the presence of the child made him happy.

Te child—a beautiful little creature—pushed his way into all their hearts at once. But the mother—the mother lay in one of the flowery little rooms upstairs and seemed to have no will to live. For days and weeks she had a wasting low fever. When she came out of it she still seemed comfortless. She would lie on her pillow with the tears oozing from between her closed lids, except when the child was brought to her; and then she would clasp him to her and seem to find a consolation in the feel of him in her arms.

It was quite a long time before she was downstairs. Indeed, it was a scolding from Nance that roused her out of her apathy and turned her thoughts to getting well.

"Would you lave the blessed lamb an orphan?" said Nance.

The woman seemed to understand, though she had only a little English. That very day she insisted on getting up. It was already November by this itme, but the climate was pleasant enough in the kitchen of Godwin's Farm, where the fire of logs in the great chimney-place was enough to roast an ox.

"For all she's a heathen foreigner," said Nance to Michael Godwin that night, "she's got no idle flesh about her."

Presently the woman—her name was Maddalena and the child was Reppo—was doing all manner of things about the house. With the occupation and returning health the colour came to her cheek and the light to her eye. Mr. Hurst, coming in one day and sitting down to talk with her in her own tongue, discovered that she was an extraordinarily beautiful woman. Her hair, purple-black and silky, framed a face of a pure oval. Her beautiul eyes, her gentle expression, the glowing ardour of her gaze as she heard Michael's footsteps coming round the house, frightened Mr. Hurst.

He went away perturbed. Poor Maddalena had told him the truth about herself. She had trusted him as a padre. Poor child, there was only sinlessness, he felt sure, behind that face. She had told him her pitiful story—how she had come to England with her husband, who was one of a troupe of acrobats travelling from place to place. There had been a shrinking loo kin Maddalena's face when she talked of her husband which made Mr. Hurst feel that he had not been good to her. However, Luigi had made an engagement to call for Virginia Tracy at six o'clock that same evening. He turned to his other neglected feminine correspondents, but try as he might to forget the incident of the girl from Omaha, he could hear only a rather shy voice that had answered his call at 009 River. Since business was far from pressing, Kelly spent much of the day wondering as to Virginia Tracy's appearance.

Toward five o'clock he turned homeward. He could not recall in his own history having been so particular as to the set of his evening clothes. He was to take Virginia Tracy to dinner and the theatre.

Kelly and the girl from Omaha were sitting at a small table in the restaurant before the young lawyer realized the full extent of his luck. The eyes that shone through the candle light at his were big and grey and appealing; they looked sharply at him now and again as if in apology for their nearness to him.

During their short drive down in the taxi she had talked swiftly and nervously about Helen Ware, Omaha, and the approaching wedding. It had been quite unnecessary for Kelly to do more than agree in a noncommittal way, to anything she chose to say. He had found himself enjoying the musical voice, even though he doubted the source of her words. He chided himself for a silly idiot. All bunco girls were soft and innocent and alluring! That was their stock-in-trade.

Kelly had never been in Omaha, nor had he so much as heard of Helen Ware, and he hoped now he never would, but he found that with Virginia Tracy's lead he could follow his role in the story with only occasional slips.

The girl across the table looked at him from time to time with vague questioning. That mute appeal went straight to Kelly's heart and before he led the girl from the restaurant he had begun to doubt his own identity. Perhaps there was an Helen Ware in Omaha, and perhaps she was engaged to a man named Kelly.

"Thank goodness I'm not the Kelly!" muttered the young lawyer as he piloted Virginia to a seat in the orchestra.

During the performance Kelly became satisfied in his own mind that there was an Helen Ware, that she was engaged to a Kelly ,and that Virginia Tracy was to be bridesmaid.

"I'm glad you are not the bride," he said, unconsciously voicing his thoughts.

Virginia cast a startled glance at him, then burst into a laugh. "That is a very complimentary speech!"

A dull colour mounted to the roots of Kelly's auburn hair and Virginia's eyes narrowed themselves into keen scrutiny.

"I only meant," Kelly fumbled for words, "that I would not have had this pleasure of meeting you—then."

"Still," Virginia stated with a laugh in her eyes, "a man generally has had the pleasure of meeting the girl to whom he is engaged."

"There are exceptions — to all rules," laughed Kelly and slipped from the dangerous subject.

After the theatre they had supper and then a drive home through the park. Somehow, Helen Ware had dropped from the conversation.

At parting Virginia looked up with a guilty flush. "I will write to-night and tell Helen how nice you have been to me," she said, and with a little nervous clasp of the hand, she was gone.

Virginia flew with light feet up the stairs to her room. Her cheeks were flushed and she tried to escape from the memory of the expression in Kelly's eyes when he had touched her hand.

After a restless night she was awakened by the postman's whistle.

There was a letter for her from Helen Ware. After Virginia had conquered the emotions that had arisen at sight of Helen's writing, she broke the seal.

"Dearest Virgy,—This is just a scratch to tell you that I am almost sure I gave you the number 302 instead of 203 for Jim's office. I hope you haven't written yet, as there are probably a dozen Kellys in each of those great office buildings——"

The letter dropped from Virginia's nerveless fingers. The whole awful mistake dawned on her. A storm of weeping burst over her. What had her companion of the evening before thought of her? There was no question in her mind save that, and Virginia blushed at her own reflection when she realized it.

The question was answered before nine o'clock when Virginia descended for breakfast.

A dozen of the most exquisite pink chrysanthemums awaited her. In the box she found a note. Kelly had spent a restless night, being unable to forgive himself for having taken so mean an advantage of a girl from the West. His apology was abject. Virginia found room for a smile in her eyes as she read Kelly's note.

"It wasn't entirely his fault," she whispered into the biggest of the chrysanthemums. "If I hadn't put the wrong address on, he couldn't possibly have done—what he did."

"And what did he do?" Virginia questioned herself.

"We know—but we won't tell," the flowers nodded.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS AND SUGGESTIONS

Old English Ballad

The cooks shall be busied by day and by night,
In roasting and boiling, for taste and delight,
Their senses in liquor, that's happy they'll steep,
Though they be afforded to have little sleep;
They still are employed for to dress us, in brief,
Plum pudding, goose, capon, mince pies and roast beef.

Although the cold weather doth hunger provoke,
'Tis a comfort to see how the chimneys do smoke;
Provision is making for beer, ale and wine,
For all that are willing or ready to dine;
Then haste to the kitchen for diet, the chief,
Plum pudding, goose, capon, mince pies and roast beef.

All travellers, as they do pass on their way,
At gentlemen's halls are invited to stay;
Themselves to refresh and their horses to rest,
Since that he must be old Christmas' guest;
Nay, the poor shall not want, but have for relief
Plum pudding, goose, capon, mince pies and roast beef.

Eleventh Hour Gifts

Most of us know what it is to be confronted at the eleventh hour with the necessity of preparing some Christmas remembrance for a friend who had been overlooked. Here are a few good suggestions for acceptable things that may be arranged for in a short time:

Hot-plate Doilies.—Get some asbestos pads. Cut a piece of heavy butchers' linen into the shape of the pad, but one inch bigger all around. For reverse side, cut same shape and size, but in two pieces that will lap over one inch. Plan to have selvage at the lapping edges. Sew up all around. Turn inside out. Sew on a narrow lace edging, or crochet on a very simple one. Several doilies can be made in three hours.

A Dainty Scarf.—Hem one and one- half yards of plain silk mull or other dainty material, sew a silk fringe at both ends, and apply a pretty stencil design. The price of this scarf depends entirely upon the quality of the material.

Stand.—Have a piece of glass cut round, eighteen inches in diameter. Place underneath this a piece of cretonne exactly the same size (if possible select cretonne with peacocks or birds of paradise in design). Bind the edges by pasting on French gilt upholsterers' braid. Green felt should be pasted on the bottom.

This makes a very acceptable gift for people who like to keep their polished tables from being scratched, and it will also make an excellent standard for a vase of flowers.

Card-Table Covers.—Buy three yards of Killarney linen a yard wide, cut into three pieces a yard square; hem. At each corner sew two pieces of tape just long enough to tie around the legs stitch a diamond heart, club, and spade. In the centre of each of these respectively the figures one, two, and three. Hearts, clubs, diamonds, and spades should be embroidered in their stitch. Outline figures in red.

Lavender Bags.—Purchase imported English lavender flowers for twenty-five cents; half a yard of fine lawn, twenty cents; three yards of narrow ribbon, twenty-five cents. Total, seventy cents. Make long narrow bags of lawn; fill with lavender flowers; draw up, and tie with ribbon one and one-half inch from the end, leaving a frill of lawn. The lavender will last or years, and always bring pleasant remembrance of the donor. These bags may be made in one hour.

Book Covers.—Use either brown art linen or Scotch homespun about forty inches wide, at forty cents per yard. Cut a piece fifteen inches long and eleven inches wide. Turn under edge two inches all round, mitre corners, neatly stitching them. Finish top and bottom of centre back with a tiny hem.

Each of these may have an initial in Old English on the front cover, or they may be stenciled with a very small amount of labour and expense. Only one yard of material is required for half a dozen of these covers.

Letter Stencils.—Make an artistic stencil of her first name for the little girl. It should be neatly lettered in rather quaint style—magazine advertisements offer a wide selection of good type to copy—then taken to the tinsmith and cut out from a small pieces of heavy tin. The edges of the tin should be turned and flattened down, in order that small fingers will suffer no damage. Then the stencil is ready to be turned over to the little girl, with perhaps the addition of a box of inexpensive watercolours or coloured crayons. The uses of such a stencil are manifold. She can stencil her name on the fly-leaves of her books; she can mark her gloves and overshoes and umbrella; but, nicest of all, she can put her name on all her letter-paper, and if she uses care in the selection of colour, a very charming effect will be produced.

For the little girl who has a flower name, such as Rose, Daisy, Violetta, Columbine, Marguerite, Lily, or Pansy, a stencil of her individual flower offers many possibilities. Such a stencil may be used to mark an outline on her handkerchiefs and other linens, the flower being afterwards worked in simple outline stitch in coloured cottons. A flower design of this kind should be as simple as possible. For those who cannot design, there are always good patterns to be found on book-covers, wall-papers, and pieces of decorated china.

The cost of such a stencil is very slight, and it teaches the child to mark her belongings artistically and neatly, and affords hr a really useful and distinctive mark of possession.

GREAT WALKER

Walking, which has been comparatively a dead issue for seasons past, took on a new lease of life with the presence of that sterling heel-and-toe performer, George H. Goulding, a young Canadian, who revolutionised the sport in the United States and broke his own mile record of 6.30 by one and one-fifth seconds at the Seventy-fourth games last Saturday night in one of the greatest exhibitions of pedestrianism ever given.

He has been responsible for new records, which must be labeled as indoor marks, as, although they were faster at various instances than the longstanding records of the famous Flinders Murray, who made his own dirt tracks, and which must stand until beaten, possibly by Goulding.

George Bonhag continues to hold his own in his brushes with the scythe wearer. Quite the best piece of running during the season by this sterling judge of pace was 14.32 for three miles, a really notable effort at this distance. Of the hurdlers, Jack Elder, of the Irish-American A. C., with his mark of 24 4-5 seconds over the low obstacles, and 15 2-5 seconds over the high, made in the senior Mets, stand out as the best accomplished by an athletic club man, while George A. Chisholm of Yale overshadowed the collegians in the sport.

Daniel Ahearne set down a mark of 50 feet 11 inches for the running hop, step and jump, which will take some beating, and is by far the best ever done in America by an amateur. Harry Grumpelt of the New York A. C. was a consistent winner in his specialty, the running high jump, doing six-three several times as his best performance of the year.

Aside from McGrath in the weights, P. J. McDonald of the Winged Fist organization set himself in a niche by his shot-putting achievement, the chief of which was his star performance with the twenty-four-pound missile, which he got out the fine distance of 38 feet 10 11-16 inches, displacing the mark of Ralph Rose—38 feet 2 3-4 inches, made in 1904. With the fifty-six McGrath eclipsed all former records when he threw the weight 40 feet 3-8 inch. Ollie Sneidger of San Francisco hurled the javelin 166 feet 1 inch.

All of these ,with the exception of Ahearne and Goulding, and the addition of many other fine performers, will be eligible to try for the American Olympic team next summer at the tryouts to be held in several sections of the country on June 6, and it is anticipated that with the holding of the games in Stockholm the wearer of the American shield will again be to the fore, as in Athens, Paris, St. Louis and London.

Of the professional runners Billy Queal, the Alexandra Bay lad, who has generally cleaned up in the ranks of the "money chasers," is concededly the best man ever developed over a distance in the United States. As the only man in the world who has defeated the great Alfie Shrubb, the English runner, every time he met him during the year, he earned the reputation on all sides as being unbeatable at all distances from half a mile to fifteen miles.

THE TURF

As the premier performance on track and field of a year which has bristled with feats which have caused a many time rearrangement of Father Time's books, probably those of John Paul Jones, the Cornell student, and Matt McGrath, the former New York Athletic Club Hercules, stand out as the greatest, says an American writer.

Jones will be remembered as the lad who, in the one-mile race at the inter-collegiate championships at Cambridge last spring, wiped out the long-standing figures of Tommy Conneh, by doing 4.15.2-5 for the distance, while McGrath placed himself at the topmost rung of the hammer-throwing ladder by annexing the sixteen-pound record with a mark of 187 feet 4 inches, just three feet farther than the missile had been sent by John Flanagan.

As a devotee of athletics has said: "Of the breaking of records there is seemingly no end," this paraphrase being called out because of the numbers which have gone by the board during the past twelve months, and which are a sufficient commentary of the assiduous attention paid by the sons of Uncle Sam toward the undoing of figures, which have so well withstood the test of time and the competitive efforts of men who have won world's honours in their work of trying to get into the athletic hall of fame.

In the sprinting department Ralph C. Craig, the Michigan flyer, looms up head and shoulders above his many rivals for fast timers at the shorter distances. His 4 4-5 for the century and 21 1-5 seconds for the "two twenty," aside from being the best dash running of the year, cause close followers to back to the international of 1895, when that former great runner, Bernie Wefers, hung up similar marks.

MILD BLEND COFFEE

STRONG BLEND COFFEE

HERE IS THE ONLY SECRET OF GOOD COFFEE?

It is not because a French chef makes the coffee at the big hotels—nor only because they use expensive coffee—that it tastes so good. It IS because the chef makes the coffee the right way.

Boiling ruins coffee. Such coffee is always bitter and weedy, and the longer coffee is boiled, the less flavor it has. Boiling drives off the fine aroma and flavor and leaves in the grounds and woody fibre, which are responsible for so much indigestion among coffee drinkers.

Dalton's French Drip Coffee Pot means all the good of coffee and always good coffee—and it means that you can make a cup of delicious coffee with ⅓ less coffee.

We give this French Drip Coffee Pot absolutely free in order that you will be able to prepare as it should be made. And Dalton's Coffee is worth making right. It is entirely different, and better,—a Coffee you can drink every day, as much as you like, without fear of the effects of ordinary Coffee. By our special processes of selecting the raw Coffee—in cleaning, blending, roasting and grinding it—we take out the bitter skin which lines the Coffee berry. It is this skin, roasted and ground up in ordinary Coffee, that produces the ill-effects so common to drinkers of ordinary Coffee.

Dalton's French Drip Coffee

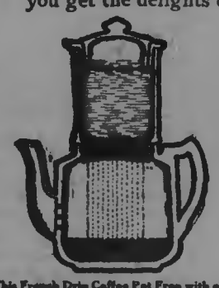
When you make a cup of Dalton's French Drip Coffee, in a Dalton's French Drip Coffee Pot, you get the delights of the finest Coffees in the world—with none of the faults of ordinary Coffee.



This French Drip Coffee Pot Free with one tin each of Dalton's MILD and STRONG Coffee at 50c. a tin.

Dalton's Coffee is better, very much better, than ordinary Coffee and you can drink it for every meal, all the year round. Only—it should be made properly. This is why we make this special offer.

MARRIES MRS. M'KIM

London, Dec. 18.—Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim, formerly Miss Margaret Emerson, of Baltimore, were married at Reigate at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the banns having been announced in the customary manner.

The wedding party, including several personal friends of the couple, motored from London early on Sunday morning to Reigate. One account of the wedding says that Mr. Vanderbilt and Mrs. McKim were married before the Registrar of Reigate. The witnesses were J. T. Langton, Miss Ethel McCormick, Roy C. Gaffer and Walter Webb Ware. The bride wore a simple gray travelling dress.

The party then motored back to London and held an informal reception at the Vanderbilt flat in Gloucester House. Mr and Mrs. Vanderbilt leaving later for the continent.

Mrs. Vanderbilt was married in 1904 to Dr. Smith Hollins McKim, formerly of Baltimore, from whom she obtained a divorce last year.

For several years past the names of Alfred G. Vanderbilt, the chief heir of Cornelius Vanderbilt's millions, and Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim have been closely associated. At various times it was reported they were soon to be married. Mr. Vanderbilt, who is accounted the richest of the younger set of millionaires, was born in 1877. He married Miss Ellen French on Jan. 11th, 1901. His wife was granted interlocutory decree of divorce May 25th, 1908, their son, William Henry Vanderbilt remaining in the mother's care. The decree was made final three months later. It was said at the time that Mr. Vanderbilt settled $1,500,000 on his former wife.

THE BROKEN HEEL

An Adventure of Peter Crewe—"The Man with the Camera Eyes."

By Harold Carter.

One of the last cases which Peter Crewe solved during our residence in England was that which I have called "The Broken Heel." The murder was not cunningly planned, but the criminal almost escaped detection through the stupidity of the local police, who framed a theory which exactly fitted in with his desires; and, having formed it, with characteristic obstinacy they stuck to it until it became untenable by reason of the confession of the murderer himself.

Sir George Taunton had been a client of mine, having extensive interests in America, and it was partly to advise with him concerning these that I had joined Crewe in London. The news of Sir George's death shocked me greatly, for only the week previously we had lunched together at his London club when he appeared to be the picture of health and destined for a ripe old age. When, therefore, I read of his murder in the newspapers, I immediately telephoned Crewe and met him at the railway station, from which we rode down to Little Whittlefield together.

Sir George Taunton had been a retired Egyptian official. For nearly twenty years he had given up brain and body to the good government of England's protectorate; and, with characteristic ingratitude, the Egyptian agitators had selected him as the butt of their ridicule and vituperation. Even when he retired to his country estate, to end his days in seclusion, among his neighbors, his work in suppressing the mutiny at Awarba had not been forgotten. At the height of the recent agitation threats of murder, which had been made in the native press, had penetrated to Little Whittlefield. For some reason Sir George was more hated in seclusion than he had ever been in the activities of his official career, and his death was looked upon as the one thing necessary to gratify the longing for English blood which seemed to possess a portion of the native press.

The Taunton estate was situated in a lonely and remote part of the west country. The highroad led past it from the nearest town, Quantock, 11 miles away. On the other side of the Queen Anne mansion was a deep lake, about a mile in width, and covered with snow, beneath which lay, at this time, a good six inches of ice—for the winter had been exceptionally severe. Where the high road was fronted by the great gates stood the lodge of Evans, the porter, a man who had been for some years in Sir George's service and, although addicted to liquor, was considered trustworthy. It was Evans, together with Fisher, the local police chief, who met us at the station and told us the facts concerning the tragedy.

On the morning of the previous day his servants had found Sir George lying dead in his bed, a knife in his heart. Upon his breast was a clipping from a newspaper, detailing briefly the threats that had been made against the ex-official by a member of the Egyptian revolutionists. Furthermore, a stranger, a South European as had at first been thought, but, in the light of later facts obviously an Egyptian, had been seen during the preceding week in Quantock, although he had subsequently disappeared. There was no doubt, said Fisher, that this man was an agent of the revolutionists, and that, having scaled the park wall, he had entered Sir George's bedchamber and murdered him, afterward looting the house and escaping. No trace of him had yet been found.

"Then robbery was his object?" asked Crewe.

"We think it was an afterthought," said Fisher. "Or perhaps he may have decided to add robbery to the other crime after entering the estate. He removed all the silver ware, a quantity of the late Lady Taunton's jewels, which Sir George kept in a safe, and—"

"How did he know that they were in the safe?" asked Crewe, turning his gaze full upon Evans.

The porter flushed. "The safe was in the bedroom," he said, defiantly. "It was easy to suspect there were jewels inside."

"And the peculiar thing," said Fisher, "is that he took the things away in a wheelbarrow."

"A wheelbarrow?" said Crewe, musing. "Well, we must examine the premises."

"That won't do you any good, gentlemen," said Fisher. "The man is dead, and his barrow is with his body."

"Dead?" queried Crewe.

"No doubt about it, though we're bound to make investigations on the off chance. Come with me, gentlemen, and I'll show you just how he entered and how he died."

Fisher led us to the side entrance. All around the house were the tracks of the barrow—a single line, cut by the front wheel in the snow.

"Has it snowed since the murder?" Crewe demanded.

"Not a particle."

"Then," said Crewe, emphatically, "if these are wheelbarrow tracks, where are his boot prints?"

"That puzzled us for a long time, sir," said Fisher. "Finally we decided that he must have sat in the barrow and let it slide down this incline. You see the ground slopes considerable."

"Then there would be marks of the barrow legs. How could he slide in it and hold it up at the same time?"

"He must have balanced himself before he started," Fisher replied. "And you see, Mr. Crewe, every few yards the tracks cease and begin again a yard or more on one side. That's where the legs fell down and he covered up the tracks with snow. There was a slight thaw yesterday, and that hid the traces of his work."

Crewe grunted but said nothing. Fisher led us round the house. The track of the wheel ran down to the frozen surface of the pond and thence across the ice in a series of curves interrupted every few yards and recommencing a little distance away. In the middle of the pond I saw a gap of black water. The wheel tracks ceased here; there were imprints of feet, but confused and irregular; then across the water, the barrow tracks began again and led to the opposite shore.

One thing I noticed. Across the water there was nothing but the single wheel track; but on the side nearer the mansion there were soft, shapeless holes in the snow at intervals of a yard of more on either side of the wheel markings.

"That's where the barrow legs went down," said Fisher, when Crewe pointed these out to him.

"Now, gentlemen, this is the theory of the police," said Fisher. "The murderer scaled the wall of the estate which runs back of the other shore of the pond and got into the pheasant woods, in which his barrow had been concealed. He wheeled it over the ice toward the mansion, with the idea of utilizing it for carrying away the plunder, probably to some vehicle which he had in waiting at a safe distance. He wheeled the barrow up to the house, entered, committed the crime, and started out with the plunder, dumped into the barrow. But the ice, which had borne the barrow when it was empty, would not support its weight when it was full. In the middle of the pond it broke, and he was drowned."

Fisher looked round at us triumphantly, as one who has solved the greatest of all mysteries.

"How deep is the pond where the ice is broken?" I asked.

"Fifty feet," said Evans. "Some say more."

"Have you grappled for the plunder, to make sure it is there?" I asked Fisher.

"Evans let down a line," he said, "but he couldn't find anything. The current is too swift; it would carry everything beneath the ice. We shall have to wait till spring."

Meanwhile Crewe, apparently not noticing Fisher's explanations, was searching among the footprints round the hole. Presently he stooped down and picked up a small wet object which was floating on the surface of the water. It was the heel of a man's boot, but so abraded and water-soaked that it could not have been fitted with certainty to any shoe.

"Gentlemen," said Crewe, raising himself, "the search is at an end. You see that hole in the bank beside the lake?" he continued, pointing to the entrance of a some-time fox warren, which appeared at the base of a knoll of sandy earth upon the opposite shore. "You will find everything there, I think."

"Impossible!" cried Fisher, staring at him. I stared, too. Miraculous as had appeared to be some of Crewe's deductions, it seemed incredible that he could have solved this problem in so striking a fashion.

"If you're afraid that your fine theory will be shattered, of course you need not go there," said Crewe, sneering at Fisher. And this attitude was so unusual a one with Crewe that I looked at him in greater astonishment than before.

"Well, sir," said the porter Evans, who had been regarding Crewe attentively, "if the gentleman says the stuff's there and is so positive about it, at least there won't be no harm looking."

"Right you are," cried Fisher. "I'll bet you five shillings, Mr. Crewe, that it's not there."

"I never bet upon a certainty," replied Crewe, superciliously.

"Then let's go there at once and see!" cried Fisher, stung by the taunt.

"What'd be the sense in his hiding the stuff down there?" asked the porter.

"Suppose you crawl in and bring it out for us, my man," said Crewe, turning upon him.

"That I will, sir, for sure," said Evans briskly. Accordingly we started off toward the bank and, arriving there Evans went down upon his hands and knees and thrust his head and arms into the hole, while Crewe stood immediately over him.

Presently Evans came out, very dirty, but manifestly triumphant.

"It's a blind hole," he said, shaking the loose sand from his sleeves. "There ain't no silver there, sir. Would you like to try for yourself?" he continued, sneeringly.

"Yes, suppose you bring us out the silver, Mr. Crewe," said Fisher patronisingly. "It's a certainty, you remember."

But Crewe only stood by, hanging his head, apparently dejected and humiliated.

"No, I must have made a mistake," he said.

"People generally do who jump to such rapid conclusions," said the policeman. "I don't think, sir, that any American amateurs can improve upon the methods of the English police. We're slow, but sure—a phrase you may have heard in your own country, sir," he concluded, the picture of easy triumph.

"Well," said Crewe, "I suppose you'll give me one more chance? I should like to meet you gentlemen at the porter's gate this time to-morrow. All I ask is a little time to think of some new theory."

"All the time you want, Mr. Crewe," said Fisher. And he started away with the porter, leaving Crewe and myself together. As they went I could see their backs heaving with their laughter. Evidently they were enjoying Crewe's discomfiture.

"Did you really think the silver was hidden in that hole?" I asked of Crewe, as we walked back toward the mansion where the housekeeper had fitted up a room for us.

"No," he replied, laughing. "I wanted an opportunity to inspect the soles of Evans' boots."

"To see if the heel fitted?" I cried.

"Not altogether. I was looking for the marks of what I hope to fish out of the hole tonight. Yet, as I suspected, he has had his boots heeled recently—probably did it himself, so there is nothing to be learned in that way."

"What is in the hole?"

"The real wheelbarrow," Crewe answered with a laugh. "Will you be ready to come on a fishing trip with me when the moon gets up?"

"Of course," I answered.

"I have secured a length of cord," said Crewe. "Thirty feet will be ample. Evans was lying about the depth of the lake; one can see that from the configuration of the surrounding ground. And I have a grappling iron, or rather the hook of a letter file which I took the liberty of securing from inside the window of Sir George's library while we were perambulating round the house. With these I think we shall discover what we want."

"Crewe," I hazarded, "suppose you admit a variation upon your usual procedure."

"In what way?"

"Heretofore you have told me what your clew was after the detection of the murder. Suppose this time you tell me in advance, so as to afford me the pleasure of working with you."

"Well," said Crewe, smiling, "I will. The murderer is Evans, the porter, who, while intoxicated, entered his master's house upon a mission of robbery. He had unlocked the safe, whose number he had secured, when he turned to find Sir George wide awake and looking at him. He stabbed him to the heart with the bradawl which he held in his hand."

"How do you know it was a bradawl?"

"Because a bradawl was used in heeling his shoes, as I discovered when he was kneeling in front of that hole in the bank. To continue, after having perpetrated the murder he was filled with consternation. Hastily slinging his booty—which was in a bag—"

"There was no barrow?"

Crewe shook his head.

"Over his back, he hurried away and concealed it—where, it is useless to inquire. We might search the estate for days without discovering this and, after all, it is irrelevant to our purpose. Then, and then only, he remembered that he had read in his Sunday newspaper of the threats made against his master's life. That seemed to offer salvation. He stole back to the house and placed upon the dead man's breast the clipping from the newspaper, detailing these threats. Then he rushed off to Fisher and concocted some story—and the imagination of the townspeople furnished the dark stranger who had been lurking in the neighborhood, a lay figure who frequently appears after a mysterious murder."

"How do you know all this?"

"I sensed it first," said Crewe. "Then I soon built up my criminal by the heel. To begin with, it was, though water-soaked, unusually small for a man's heel—that is, considering the poor quality of the leather, which indicated that the shoe belonged to a poor—that is to say, a laboring man.

"A small heel means a small and rather narrow shoe. A shoe of that description means a light, but not necessarily short man. The foot, of course, develops strictly in accordance with the body's need of support.

"I knew that the owner was not short, because of the space between the foot tracks, indicating length of limb. Consequently the owner of the heel was tall and slight. There are only three types of men in the world, Langton; the tall and slight, the short and slight, and the heavy man—whether tall or not is immaterial. Now our friend Evans exactly answered the description which the heel afforded me."

"But you could never convict a man upon such theorizing."

"No, of course, I merely used the theory as a groundwork, from which to build up facts. I got those when he was kneeling in front of the hole."

"What were they?"

But Crewe became suddenly taciturn. "Wait till we bring home the catch tonight," he answered. "Langton, I smell supper, and this country air has made me uncommonly hungry."

The hours after supper seemed to spin out interminably. We smoked our pipes in the library until midnight, when a yellow arc on the eastern horizon indicated the rising of the moon. When it had mounted high enough to flood the country with its silvery light Crewe and I set out silently from the house toward the lake, he carrying the file hook, I the length of cord. We crossed the ice and, having reached the hole, which was already covered with a new coating, tied the hook to the cord, weighted it with a paper-weight which Crewe took from his pocket, and let it descend. As Crewe had foretold, the 30 feet proved ample. We felt the weight strike the bottom when the cord was three-quarters out, and then ensued one of the most wearying explorations that I have ever known.

"Patience, always patience, Langton," said Crewe to me. "The chances are, roughly, about 50 to 1 against our striking what we went at each cast of the line. And then," he added, as if in an afterthought, "it may not be there. But it must be; there was nowhere else to throw it."

That some object besides stones lay at the bottom of the pond was evident, for we felt the hook and the weight repeatedly strike against it; but every time the cord came up with nothing but the empty hook coated with slime. Again and again we grappled, but in vain. Once we brought the object of our search a yard or more from the bottom, but it fell back.

"Take a stroll and smoke, Langton," said Crewe, finally. "This is one of the disagreeable tasks of a detective's life. We have six hours yet until daybreak."

He took the cord from my numbed fingers and fished, patient and persistent. I smoked one pipe—two—lit the third and thrust the stem into my tobacco-burned mouth. Suddenly I perceived that Crewe was hauling something out of the hole. He brought it to the level of the ice—over. Then it dropped from the hook and fell clattering upon the frozen surface with a metallic clang. I hurried toward the spot in time to see Crewe lift it in his hand with a low shout of joy.

It was a rusty skate!

"And is that all?" I asked. "Have we been fishing for that thing since midnight?"

"All?" Crewe repeated. "Don't you know why I wanted it?"

"No."

Crewe was hauling something out of the hole.

"There were marks of the clamp on the heel I found."

"But you can't convict Evans—"

"And marks of the skate clamps on Evans's soles yesterday. But not on the heels."

"You mean that Evans was wearing skates when he crossed the pond?"

"I means," said Crewe, rising, "that the so-called wheelbarrow tracks were nothing but the tracks left by the skate-blades in the soft snow. That is why there were no footprints round the house, and not Fisher's absurd reason."

"But there was only a single line."

"Exactly. Did you ever hear of a skater going with both feet down? Were there not gaps in the lines? That was where Evans shifted from one foot to the other.

"As I was saying this evening, Langton, I knew from the space between the lines that the wearer of the skates was tall. He came on skates because he knew what deadly witnesses bootprints are, although he had not sense enough to think of the wheelbarrow theory until Fisher so kindly obliged him. The marks across the ice were made the following night."

"The following night?" I re-echoed.

"Precisely. When Fisher gave him his ceul Evans was not slow to take it. He skated to the opposite shore; then turned again. But in the middle of the pond he lost his skate. Langton," said Crewe, turning to me, "did you not think of skates when you saw the floating heel? Is there anything but a skate that will pull a heel from a boot?

"His heel came off. Thereupon he broke a hole in the ice and flung the skate into the water."

"Why not both?"

"He needed one skate on which to return. He might have carried the useless skate, but you must remember that his brain was in a whirl, and his guiding impulse, from first to last, was to get rid of evidence. So he returned on one skate, putting his foot down from time to time to prevent fall—or rather the toe of his boot. That formed the blunt holes in the snow which Fisher ascribed to the legs of the wheelbarrow."

"Poor evidence on which to convict," I said.

"Unless a confession can be forced," Crewe answered. "Remember, Langton, that we are not dealing with a normal man. He has passed through agonies of fear during these days. Yesterday his triumph over me brought about an intense reaction. He has probably been drinking all night. He is in that condition of mind that is common to patients under the influence of chloroform: at a certain stage they will tell everything that is asked them. Now some sudden shock that will bring about another psychic revolution may act upon his mind with overwhelming force—"

He broke off and paced slowly back to the house, deep in thought. He did not even hear my questions.

* * * * * * * *

Crewe had sent me ahead of him for the meeting the following day. I had been chatting at the lodge with Fisher and Evans for some minutes after the appointed hour, and still Crewe did not make his appearance.

"I think," said Fisher sarcastically, "your friend, the amateur, has had enough detective experiences to last him for some time. I should not be surprised if he failed to turn up at all."

"He's a damn fool," blurted out Evans, whose flushed face and trembling hands indicated that he had been celebrating his success rather too freely.

"Waiving that point," said Fisher, with a laugh, "where is this celebrated detective friend of yours? My duty won't permit—"

He spring round swiftly. I started. Evans jumped back and yelled as Crewe's hand fell on his shoulder from behind.

"I lost my skate in the hole in the ice," he said. "Evans," he continued, seizing the porter by the arms and peering into his face, "the game's up. Mr. Fisher, take him. What? Why, look at his face, man, look at his face!"

But Evans had fallen in the snow, and, kneeling there, he blurted out the story of his crime.

STOPPED PLAY FOR THAT DAY

Horse Liked the Flavor of the Baseball and Proceeded to Make a Light Lunch.

Four urchins were playing ball on upper Park avenue, while not far off stood an ice wagon with two sleepy-looking horses attached to it. By chance the ball rolled down the gutter toward the ice wagon. It slowed up almost under the feet of one of the horses and the animal seeing an unusual object on the pavement before him, lowered his head, snuffed at it and before the youngsters could snatch it away had it between his teeth and was munching it with lazy relish, for it was stuffed with something that the ordinary baseball is not.

"Here, you, gi' me dat ball!" shouted one of the boys, tugging away at the big horse's bridle.

"Yes, drop dat ball, you!" chorused the other three. But the horse, unheeding, munched on dreamily.

"Say, mister," pleaded one of the boys, as the man in charge of the wagon appeared, "make him give us our ball, won't yer He's eatin' it."

"Ah, gwan and git out of the way," was the response, as the man stepped into the wagon.

"He's got our ball, I tell yer!" cried the boys.

But the iceman only gathered up the reins and drove away, the horse still munching, while the four boys lined up on the curb looked after the departing wagon in silent consternation.—New York Press.

Thirst for Knowledge.

Stringent laws prevent the serving of liquor even in dining cars on trains in North Dakota, but the waiters have exact knowledge of the state boundary lines, according to the St. Louis Mirror. They had been rolling through that interminable state a long time, when the W. C. T. U. delegate from the east came into the car for her dinner. Casting her eye out of the window upon a somewhat changed landscape, she remarked to the waiter: "Are we still in North Dakota?" "No, ma'am," answered George alertly, with a hospitable grin, "what'll you drink, ma'am?"

LIVE IN COMPLETE ISOLATION

Outside World Practically Unknown to the Dwellers in the Land of Moab.

Most travelers who visit the Holy Land content themselves with a visit to that restricted part west of Jordan. The mountainous regions of Moab, as seen by them from Jerusalem, are lost in the purple haze that constantly hangs over them, and the great stretches beyond are covered in mystery. This is true partly because of the fewer historical incidents connected with the eastern regions, but mainly on account of the great abyss of the Jordan valley that has always acted as a barrier. Few who descend into the valley, 1,300 feet below sea level, undertake to climb the hills beyond, which rise to a height of 3,000 feet.

The most striking thing about Moab has always been its isolation. However much connected by race and vicinity with their western kinsmen, the dwellers in Eastern Palestine have always been distinct and their lands have never been occupied by the nations on the west except through acts of aggression and conquest.

Even today this isolation is still felt. In giving an idea of their knowledge of present day geography, one of them remarked: "There are only four seas in the world, two of which are the Dead sea and the Sea of Galilee." Both of these are in sight of their own hills.—Christian Herald.

Public Drinking Cup.

Dangers that lurk in public drinking cups—soon to be banished from New York by order of the board of health—are shown effectively by some recent tests at Chicago's municipal laboratory. Guinea pigs inoculated with germs from public drinking vessels sickened quickly and one died. "The tests showed conclusively," said Dr. F. O. Tonney, who is in charge of the laboratory, "that there is grave danger to the public through the use of common cups in public places. About two dozen pigs were inoculated and all show signs of developing disease. The pig that died was inoculated with diphtheria germs taken from a drinking cup, and lived only twelve hours."

Smokers' Articles on View.

An exhibition of smokers' articles now occupies one of the permanent exhibition halls of Vienna. Modern methods of making cigars and cigarettes are shown by expert men and women, and in hundreds of booths every imaginable smokers' requirement, useful and ornamental, may be found. Among the curiosities are the long pipe, once the companion of Archduke Franz Karl, father of the present emperor; an artistically carved meerschaum pipe which was colored by Archduke Ferdinand d'Este, father of the heir apparent; snuff boxes once used by Napoleon I. and Andreas Hofer and the original draft of the edict published in 1831, in which "tobacco smoking" is spoken of as "a nuisance and an insult to decency," punishable by a heavy fine.

Evidently He Didn't Want It.

"I hear there was an election at your club yesterday."

"There was, and I am going to contest it and demand a recount."

"You are? Why, who was declared elected?"

"I was."

JEW IN PLACE OF POWER

As Governor of Egypt, Sir Matthew Nathan Would Occupy Position Once Held by Joseph.

Should Sir Matthew Nathan, former governor of Natal, be appointed to succeed Sid Eldon Gorst as governor of Egypt, history will have taken one of those curious turns that set agog the discerners of signs and omens, for this appointment that is pending would place in supreme administrative control of Egypt the second Jew in four thousand years.

Sir Matthew Nathan would be the successor to Joseph of his race in the administration of a country that in the time of Pharoah, who befriended Joseph, was the granary of the world, and in these later days is becoming one of the most significant countries of modern times.

Those who con the sacred scriptures for cues for the turns history may make will seize upon this incident as fulfilling one or another prediction or fancied prediction of the past, and much may be built upon it. In fact, it will be but a coincidence, but one of unusual interest, however. The practical import will be that Sir Matthew Nathan is reckoned a fine administrator and worthy of all honor.

Universal Race Congress.

In the official call for the first universal race congress, suggested by Prof. Felix Adler, at Eisenach, in July, 1906, the president, Lord Weardale, says: "Great is the historic pride of London. Great also are its manifold tragedies of squalor and poverty. This varied story will be distinguished in the summer of 1911 (July 26-29), by an episode both brilliant and unexampled. In London will assemble mankind in council. Representatives of all human groups will come from the four quarters, and lands that know the Pole star and regions that lie under the southern cross will meet each other in friendly intercourse, in the First Universal Race congress. The official congress languages will be English, German, Italian and French, though an oriental tongue may now and then announce the soul of Asia."

Terrible Itching Got Little Sleep

Mr. T. Williams, Winnipeg.

"Until Cuticura Remedies Cured Him

Those who have suffered long and hopelessly from torturing skin eruptions will read with interest this letter from Mr. T. Williams, 215 Pacific Ave., Winnipeg (dated Jan. 14, 1911): "The Cuticura Remedies certainly did work finely, and I am thankful that there is such a remedy, and that I tried it. About three months ago a terrible itching commenced on my body. I could not understand it. It gradually grew worse and covered a large portion of my body. There was also a slight eruption of the skin, sort of a rash. I suffered greatly with the itching and at night time I had little sleep. I tried one or two remedies which did no good, and then I tried Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent. In about ten days I was completely cured."

For more than a generation the Cuticura Remedies have afforded the speediest and most economical treatment for itching, burning, scaly and bleeding skin and scalp humors, of young and old. Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. For a liberal sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, with 32-p. book on the care of the skin and treatment of its affections, send a postal to the Potter Drug & Chem. HER REWARD

(Short Story.)

BY HILDA M. SHAW

Annie Raynor sat, dry-eyed and watchful, beside the cot whereon her little child lay sick unto death.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Raynor, but it would be mistaken kindness to hold out to you any hope of the little one's recovery," the busy litle doctor had said to her only that morning as he hurried off on his long round of professional calls. "There is absolutely nothing else we can do."

In spite of his brusque manner, the stricken mother caught the sympathetic tone in his voice, and knowing the great tenderness of the little man, she realized that all that lay in his power to do for her dying child had been done. Still, with her mother heart yearning over her child, she had faltered out, as one hoping against hope:

"Is there absolutely nothing else we can do? An operation? Couldn't one be performed? Couldn't you operate and save him, doctor?"

At the pleading in her voice the doctor had felt the tears rise to his eyes, but he put up his hand quickly and brush the maway. "I'm afraid not in this case," he answered slowly. "I dare not perform such an operation as is required. The brain is such a delicate organ, and I only know of one man who has ever performed the operation necessary in this case successfully."

"And wouldn't he come?" There was a wail of anguish in the mother's voice as she put the question, and, hearing it, the doctor put out his hand and touched hers with a sympathetic touch.

"It wouldn't be possible to get him here in time, even if we could scrape together the money," he said sadly. "He lives at the other end of the country, and it would be impossible for him to arrive before it was too late." The poor mother burst into tears, and for a moment or two not a sound was to be heard in the sick room but the deep, heartrending sobs of a mother who was called upon to give up her only child. Presently, something, maybe the thought that her sobs might disturb her little one, caused her to control herself. As her sobs grew quieter, the doctor, whose duty called him to leave he stricken mother, said gently:

"I must go now, Annie. Keep a brave heart, my girl. After all, you can trust your child to the keeping of the God who gave him. May He comfort you!"

So saying he turned to go; but there was a choking sensation at his throat all through the day whenever his thoughts turned to the picture he had left behind of the stricken mother bending with a world of tenderness over her suffering child. For hour after hour following the doctor's visit Annie Raynor sat motionless by the bedside of the child, who lay, all unconscious of her watchfulness, in the stupor which he had told her could only end in death.

At last, however, she rose and walked towards the window. From there she could distinctly see, gleaming in the fierce heat of the sun, the railway line which led to the nearest town. She glanced at the clock that was ticking upon the mantelpiece. It was four o'clock. The down train was due in a few minutes. How she wished Jim would come by it. But it was impossible, she knew. Two days before he had been called away on business, and only a few hours after he had left his wife and little one, the boy had met with an accident which had laid him upon this bed of sickness.

How she had longed for the strong support of her husband during this trial ,though, even while she cried out for his return, she dreaded the trouble she would see in his dear eyes when she met him with the sad news that their little boy was doomed—nay, in all probability the news she would have to communicate to him would be that the child was dead, for Dr. Watson had said he could only last a few short hours, and it was most unlikely that Jim could return until the morrow, for his whereabouts were so uncertain that she had no address where she could communicate with him.

Half unconsciously she stood for a moment or two at the window, looking along the railway track. Sliding along the railway track. Suddenly bright light she saw some hundred yards or so away? It flared out, then disappeared, only to flash out again brighter than before. She gazed curiously in the direction of the flame. Then, all suddenly, she realized what had happened, and opening the window softly she leaned out to see if her surmise was correct. Yes, it was as she supposed. The railway bridge had ignited—probably through the great heat. Anyhow, whatever the cause, the flames were leaping about it, and her anxious eyes saw that they were spreading rapidly, and that should the fire go on increasing there was great danger that the charred bridge would not bear the weight of the express that was so nearly due, and it would be hurled down into the river below.

She thought of the many precious lives that would in all probability be lost, and the thought came to her that she must, in some way, signal to them to stop the train. Hers was the last house in the district, and from there until the outlying houses of the town not another habitation was to be seen. Clearly it was her duty to warn the oncoming train.

She looked again at the clock. Already, if it were running to time, the train would be thundering through the station of the little village. She glanced at the child on the bed. Could she leave him for even a few minutes of the precious hours he would be with her? At first she decided that she could not. He might awaken and need her. Assuredly a mother's place was by the side of her dying child.

Then the doctor's words came back to her. "No, Annie, there is nothing you can do for him. Sit by him by all means, if it will be of any comfort to you, but I cannot give you the slightest hope that he will even move again. As far as I can tell, he will just lie there like a log until the end comes." So she had the doctor's assurance that her child would never need her again. She could be spared to warn the express of its danger. But could she tear herself away from her child?

"No: it is hard. I cannot leave you, dearie," she murmured, as she bent down and kissed the child's hot forehead. He was breathing heavily, but at the touch of the other lips he made no sign, and, with a sigh, she turned to the window once more. The flames were leaping higher and she hope to meet the pure soul of her little child again with murder upon her soul. "Yes," she told herself vehemently, "it would be murder to leave that express train full of human lives to its fate." Then she made up her mind. With a despairing glance at her sick child, a glance full of yearning at the thought that perhaps when she returned the little boy would have drawn his last breath, she tore out of the room, down the steps, and out of the little garden.

A moment later Annie Raynor was running with all her might across the field that divided their little garden from the railway track. Would she be in time? Already, in the distance, she heard the rumble of the train, and unless the driver was warned soon, it was impossible that he could draw up in time. Should the train reach the bend in the track before she did it would be impossible for them to be saved, for at the speed the express would be travelling it would be impossible for it to draw up in time.

Like the wind she rushed along. With a cry of relief, she reached the wall which divided the field from the track. Nearer and nearer came the rumble of the train. Hastily she climbed the wall, but in her haste she caught her foot in her skirt and fell. Breathless, she struggled to her feet again. Fortunately, she had fallen on the right side of the wall, and, though shaken, was unhurt. Almost without a pause she tore along.

She had reached the bend at last. Standing in the middle of the track she snatched off her gaily coloured petticoat and waved it frantically. Nearer and nearer came the iron monster. Would she be seen? She began to fear that she would not, but that, instead, she would be crushed to death beneath it. What did it matter, for her child was dying, and she would be glad to go too? But there was Jim. For his sake she must live and win through. What would his feelings be if on his return he found his wife, as well as his child, lying still in death?

With this thought to spur her on, she gave a frantic shout, and waved her skirt with all the little strength that remained in her. Then, to her relief, she saw the train slow up. A moment later the train came to a standstill, and the driver sprang from the train. "What is it?" he asked.

"The bridge is on fire," she gasped, then fell forward in a dead faint. When she recovered consciousness she was lying by the side of the track and a grave, elderly gentleman was bending over her.

"You are better?" he asked gently.

"Yes, I think so," she answered dazedly. Then, as recollection came to her, she asked, "Are they safe?"

"Yes, thanks to you," she was answered. "It is through your bravery that many homes to-day are saved from mourning." She gave a smile of satisfaction; but a moment later a spasm of pain crossed her face at the remembrance of the mourning that would be in her own home when the morrow came. At the remembrance she sprang up. "I must go to my baby," she gasped; "he is dying."

"Dying? What is the matter with him?" asked the same grave-faced gentleman who had been tending her. "Are you sure he cannot be saved?"

"Yes," she answered simply. "Dr. Watson says that there is only one man who could save him, and he is too far away, even if we could afford the expense; he says it would be impossible to get him here in time."

"And who is he?"

"Dr. Marshmellon, the great brain specialist."

"Come along," he said joyously. "Then we will save him yet."

She looked up at him in a dazed sort of way. "I—I don't understand," she stammered.

"Don't you?" he said gently. "Why, it is all so simple. I happen to be that doctor, and, if it be humanly possible, I promise that your child's life shall be given back to you in return for the many lives you have saved to-day." So it happened that when Jim Raynor returned the following day it was to find his wife, pale but happy, sitting by the bedside of their sleeping child, who, through the agency of the great physician, had been restored to them as by one of God's miracles.

Sciatica AND Lumbago

Suffered for Twenty-five Years and Could Get No Relief

Now Tells of the Wonderful Results Obtained by the Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Sciatica, neuralgia and sciatic rheumatism are the result of a run-down nervous system. For this reason all treatments must necessarily fail which do not build up the nervous system.

Mr. Collins suffered for twenty-five years and never was able to obtain satisfactory treatment until he began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. While the Nerve Food forms new blood and restores the exhausted nervous system, the Kidney-Liver Pills invigorate the action of kidneys, liver and bowels.

Mr. W. T. Collins, Morpeth, Ont., writes: "It affords me pleasure to be able to speak favourably of two of Dr. Chase's medicines—the Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. I had been a sufferer for twenty-five years from sciatica, lumbago and neuralgia and tried almost all the medicines I could hear of, without one particle of benefit, until I commenced to use Dr. Chase's. I noticed an improvement before I had used two boxes, and the benefits obtained by continued use have been wonderful. I have so much confidence in these two medicines that I have recommended them to dozens of my friends, and I have yet to hear of a single case in which they failed to give satisfaction."

Dr. Chase's medicines are for sale by all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Consumption May Yet be Wiped Out

A DECREASE OF NEARLY 40 PER CENT. IN DEATH-RATE

The following is a letter of appeal sent out to his fellow-citizens in all parts of Canada, by Mr. W. J. Gage, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National Sanitarium Association. The letter tells its own story, and is surely timely at this Christmas Season:—

Toronto, December 21st, 1911.

Dear Friend,—

Each Christmas seems to call for an increasingly urgent appeal to the people of Canada to help those who are sick in our Consumptive Homes in Muskoka.

The trustees during the year have been piling up a large debt in caring for the 300 consumptives in our Homes in Muskoka and near Toronto. They have been looking forward to this Christmas time in the hope that generous people would gladly help to share the burden.

Since our work was started in 1896, wonderfully encouraging results have been shown in a decrease of nearly 40 per cent. in the death-rate from consumption.

Not only must the trustees provide a very large sum for maintenance of the sick ones, but provision for still further accommodation must be made.

A bright young girl came to our Muskoka Home, and when advised by the Physician-in-Chief that there was no room, with tears streaming down her cheeks, she said, in the presence of one of the trustees: "Where am I to go, what am I to do, doctor? My own friends do not want me—my sisters will not kiss me."

Will you help to answer this poor girl's question?

Christmas of all seasons is the time to remember the poor and suffering. It was the Christ way. May it become ours. May we have your help this Christmas season?

Yours sincerely,

W. J. Gage

HOW SHE SHOPPED

(Short Story.)

"I wasn't responsible," Baird said. "I always had known better than to venture into a department store with a woman bent on shopping ,but, you see, I was on my wedding trip. So when Anne suggested going shopping I smiled fatuously and consented.

"Anne made for the elevators and led me to the topmost floor. Being totally ignorant of the correct method of storming a women's store, I took it for granted that starting in at the top was the rule, and that you got docked if you didn't begin that way. I believe it was the floor where you get fitted and altered when you buy ready-mades. I bashfully slunk along behind Anne as she strolled down mahogany corridors through the doors of which came wails and complaints and storms from women in the process of being altered and fitted.

"Just as I opened my mouth to ask Anne what she had bought to be fixed and when she had bought it, she turned on me blandly and said she was ready to go down to the next floor.

"There was a furniture display there and I think she priced every piece in it. In half an hour my head was a mixture of Flemish bookcases, mahogany dining-room sets, Morocco screens, and tea wagons.

"Much as I loved Anne, I began to feel pale. I figured out that my whole annual income would just about pay for what the dear girl apparently had in mind.

"When she began talking with the attentive salesman about an $800 carved chest I drew her aside. 'My dear,' said I in quavering tones, 'really you know, we can't afford an eight hun—'

"'Silly!' she said. 'As if I didn't know that! Why, I'm not going to buy any furniture—I'm just looking!' And she sailed out of there under the outraged eyes of the salesman without turning a hair.

"How women do it I can't figure out—they undoubtedly possess a sort of courage that men lack.

"When I got my breath I found we were on the china and glass and picture floor. We priced about $100,000 worth of stuff there—at least Anne did. The salesman was so impressed by her air that he did his best to sell her a dozen plates, very cheap at $1,500. I assure you that I got cold chills, so realistic was her assumption that possibly if the plates pleased her she might condescend to have them sent to our address.

"And she was absolutely impervious to my agonized glances.

"She considered sets in rock crystal and she turned up her nose at $100 coffee cup. At last she led me down to the floor beneath. It was full of hats—women's hats. Anne almost purred. What on earth she wanted there I couldn't imagine, because I distinctly remembered hearing her say that her trousseau included 10 hats!

"She didn't give me a chance to point out o her hat she could wear only one hat at a time, because she promptly had the head milliner and two earnest saleswomen surrounding her.

"That girl tried on 33 hats by actual count and, as each one was more expensive than its predecessor, you can imagine the state of mind I was in I never knew there were so many different kinds of hats and feathers and things in the whole world until that day. I saw myself proceeding through the rest of our trip lugging bandboxes and just as I was working up an extremely bitter frame of mind Anne smiled sweetly at me and said she believed she was ready to go.

"We left the saleswoman reviving each other and proceeded to the silks and velvets. It was perfectly wonderful how much Anne knew about qualities and wearing abilities. She routed six salesmen before she descended to the linens and lingeries. I won't attempt to relate our visit to that floor, but some time I want to tell you about a $500 tablecloth and napkins to match.

"The rest is a sort of mist. I know that at last we found ourselves in the basement among the kitchen furnishings. There Anne simply had a glorious time pricing things. Up to now she had bought absolutely nothing, so I woke up with a start when she ran out from a dark, underground corner with a tea kettle in her hand. It was brass, with odd figures on it, and it was really quaint.

"'Isn't this a dear?' she asked. 'And only 50 cents—think of it! How lovely it will look in the fireplace!' So we bought it.

"That isn't all. When we unpacked it at home she deliberately marked a 12 in front of the .50. Then the first time her cousin, who is one of those women who pride themselves on knowing the value of every article on earth, saw it she threw up her hands.

"'My dear!' she cried. 'Did you get that kettle for only twelve dollars and a half? Why, you got a perfectly tremendous bargain. It is worth double—you can't fool me on antiques! Where did you get it?'

"'Oh,' said Anne, nonchalantly, 'I picked it up while we were away. I just happened to run across it.'

"So, after all," Baird concluded, "I think I see how by spending half a dollar and five hours a woman can really accomplish something when she goes shopping."—Chicago News.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

ABOUT TABLE LINEN.

Too little care is exercised by the modern housewife where her table linen is concerned. It should not be forgotten that linen gathers mildew very easily, and therefore should never be allowed to remain in a damp place, or in contact with a plastered wall.

Our grandmothers used to wrap linen in blue paper to keep it from turning yellow. Whether it has this effect or not is open to question. It is, however, advisable to put all the linen in a dark place. Table and bed linen will last very much longer if it is kept in proper condition. Those articles which are not in constant use should be rinsed free of starch and slowly dried in the shade. If there is a slight breeze it will assist in softening the fibers of the cloth. Linen put away with starch in the threads is apt to crack in time or acquire creases which are difficult to remove.

HEARTH CLEANING.

For those who are fortunate enough to have open fire places, it is a good plan to make the hearths in the house red instead of white, as the whiting soon shows the dirt. Buy some red ochre in the powder and a brush with a long handle. Put a large tablespoonful of the powdered ochre in a jar with half a pint of water, mix well, and paint the hearth evenly and carefully with it. When dry a beautiful warm and artistic shade of red is the result.

WASHING IRISH LACE.

Fine Irish crochet can be beautifully washed by placing in hot suds in a narrow jar, shaken well and allowed to stand for a few hours. This ensures no broken threads. Irish crochet should be pinned to the ironing board and allowed to dry, never ironed.

Lace may be washed by wrapping it flat on an empty flask or bottle, covering the lace with a layer of cheesecloth, and then immersing the bottle and lace in a basin of warm soapy water. It may be thus rubbed as much as necessary. After washing through several changes of water let it dry on the bottle and it will look like new.

WASHING LINGERIE WAISTS.

Wash as usual, but do not starch. When dry dip in borax water, using one tablespoonful of borax to one quart of warm water. Wring out and fold in a towel for a few hours. Then iron dry. The waists will not get mussed nearly as soon as when starched, and they are much easier to iron.

INCANDESCENT MANTLE.

Before using new gas mantles soak them in vinegar and hang them up to dry. When quite dry put them on the burners. In this way a brilliant white light is obtained, and the mantles will last twice as long as usual, even in draughty places.

WHEN WASHING BRUSHES.

Before washing ebony brushes smear a little good vaseline over the backs. This prevents the ammonia or soda water in which they are washed from injuring the ebony. The vaseline should afterward be carefully rubbed on and the backs polished with dry cloths.

A HEALTH HINT.

When you open the milk bottle be sure that you first wash off the top and mouth. Even when the milkman is late, do not say, "Well, for this once it won't hurt," for just that one time the milkman might have driven through a street where dust might have been raised by the night white wings and a portion settled on the tops of the milk bottles.

Pour a little water on the lid of a closed bottle to-morrow morning and reflect it under the gaslight, and you will find that the tiny lake will not need a microscope to tell its tale of dust lying there.

PEACH TRIFLE.

Boil together for five minutes one scant cupful of sugar and one cupful of water, dropping into it, as fast as stoned, the pits of one quart of ripe peaches. Keep the stones in the syrup for ten minutes, drawing the saucepan to the side of the fire. Skim them out and lay in the pared peaches, stewing slowly until they are tender. Set aside until the first heat has passed off, then press through a sieve. Line a glass dish with stale sponge cakes dipped in sherry, spread over them the cold peach pulp and cover with one and one-half cupful of thick cream, sweetened and flavored with two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and one-half teaspoonful vanilla and whipped to a thick solid froth.

A FRYING HELP.

When frying veal, either steaks or chops, first dip the meat in a little sweet milk. Then place in a frying pan containing hot butter or a mixture of hot butter and lard. Fry over a good fire and see the results. The milk causes the meat to brown beautifully and imparts to it a delicious flavour and unusual tenderness. Veal fried in this way browns quickly and the juice of the meat is retained, which is not the case when frying is continued for a long time.

MOLDED RICE WITH DATES.

Stone one pint of water and cook them for ten minutes in a syrup made with one cupful of sugar. Add a teaspoonful of vanilla, and two tablespoonfuls sherry, cover and set aside until cold. In the meantime wash thoroughly a cupful of rice; drain and drop in a kettle of boiling salted water and boil hard for five minutes. Drain and turn the rice into a double boiler, add a pint of milk, cover and cook until tender and dry, adding more milk if necessary. When done add a tablespoonful of vanilla and one tablespoonful of sugar and pack the rice in a mold. When cold turn it out on a platter, baste well with the syrup and arrange the dates over and around it. Serve plain or with cream.

BAKED EGGS ON HAM.

Butter small earthen dishes and place a generous teaspoonful of chopped ham in each. Carefully break an egg over each portion of ham, add salt, pepper and a bit of butter and bake until the whites are set.

If jellies are becoming candied cover them with a quarter of an inch of pulverized sugar, underneath the paper, and they will remain in good condition, even for years.

To take out waggon grease, if it is the kind made of animal fat, sponge with ether; if it is the kind made with coal tar, it may be removed with a cloth dipped in petroleum.

If you must carry hot coals from the fire and fear that they will spill why not try dropping them into a long-handled frying pan? They cannot escape and cannot hurt the pan.

To prevent thread from knotting when doing hand sewing, always make a knot in the end last broken from the spool. This done, stretch the thread by giving it several quick pulls.

If furniture has grown dull and streaked, try rubbing it with a mixture of equal parts of turpentine and coal oil. It polishes quickly and is much less expensive than the prepared polishes.

Suede shoes that have become worn and shiny may be freshened by rubbing them lightly with emery paper.

Always line a cake pan with medium-weight yellow paper. Grease the paper, not the pan, except the edges.

When roasting meat add just a few drops of vinegar to the water used for basting to make the meat more tender.

A spoonful of oxgall to a gallon of water will set the colours of almost any goods soaked in it previous to washing.

To make perfect stew of tough beef cut it into small pieces, weighing about half an ounce, and cook for eight hours.

A chocolate sauce, such as is served with vanilla ice cream, poured over lady fingers, makes a simple and tasty dessert.

Soak old flour sacks in borax water over night to remove the printing and then boil for half an hour in soapy water, and they will make excellent wash cloths for dishes.

To bake potatoes quickly, place them in the oven and cover with an inverted pie plate.

TAILOR-MADE SUIT

An admirable new winter model is of plum purple, with a straight narrow skirt, trimmed below the knees with a deep fold of the material, piped with black satin; there are two swinging panels at the back, which give a broad effect across the waist at the back; this, by the way, is one of the dominant features of this winter's styles, and will be seen on every kind of gown.

The coat is quite large and does not follow the slim, straight lines that all the tailors made conspicuous last summer; it has a black satin cord across the back a little above the waist, which holds the material in, and a peplum, or lower part, which fits the hips snugly and reaches half way to the knees.

There are two buttons to fasten it above the waist line in front, and a voluminous collar, square across the back and running to points at the waist. This is made of French gray broadcloth, finished off with a band of the material, and with an Egyptian design in tubular black braid in the middle of the back.

"The Only Thing That Will Relieve Neuralgia."

The piercing pains of Neuralgia, which often follows a bad cold or La Grippe, are frequently almost unbearable and few medicines afford any relief to the sufferer.

"I am a rural mail carrier and have been a user of the Dr. Miles medicines for years.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills can't be beaten. They are the only thing I have found that will relieve my neuralgia and I have tried most everything, besides medicine from the doctor. I am willing to tell anyone what the Anti-Pain Pills did for me."

CHARLES HILDERBRANDT,
Box 205 Woodvill. Ohio

If you, like Mr. Hilderbrandt, "have tried most everything" in vain, why not do as he did, fight your aches and pains with Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. Let the pills bear the brunt of the battle. No matter how stubborn the contest, they will come out victorious.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills stand on their record, which is a long list of cures extending back a generation.

Druggists everywhere sell them. If first package fails to benefit, your druggist will return your money.

The Story of a Klondike Christmas

BY E. A. TAYLOR IN THE WESTMINSTER.

Yukon Territory is a land where men find gold and death. Across its north curves the terrible girdle of the Arctic Circle. At its south are heaped up barriers of snow capped mountains, gateless except for the White Pass and dreaded Chilcott, where so many died in the mad trail of '98 by the sword of the storm, when the north winds were unleashed while they were there above shelter.

To-day the railway has climbed through the White Pass, and has its terminus at White Horse, one of the twenty stations of the Mounted Police from White Pass summit to Dawson, in the Klondyke—five hundred miles.

White Horse is a little town set among a chaos of rock and glacier. Above it is Lake Atlin among the snow mantled mountains, whose waters pour down through the terrible White Horse canyon and rapids to Lake LeBerge. Beyond that are more of the wildest rapids ever penned in black fanged canyons, and out of this war of waters the great river Yukon is born.

Adam McNabb, of the Mounted Police, was riding his splendid mare down the steep trail to White Horse that August afternoon. He was young, and good looking in his uniform of scarlet jacket and black breeches with a yellow stripe down each leg. Also he carried a repeating rifle, and was agreeably conscious that he represented the majesty of imperial law.

He was on his way to visit his friend, Luke Moore, a missionary, who had a real home in White Horse, furnished with a wife and baby. The men were close friends, though Adam flippantly called himself a Sadducee, asserting that if a man lives straight in this world he need not trouble about another, and plumed himself on neither, believing or disbelieving anything in religion. He was impossible to be argued with, and Luke never did.

Adam was close to the missionary's house when he saw a man, evidently intending to visit there too. "He's a white man all right," he thought, after a long look at the other, "though he walks like an Indian. Of course it couldn't be him, but he certainly has a look of Thlinket's boy."

He rode into the canyon and met the stranger. He looked about twenty, a young man with the features of the Scandinavian people who met the policeman's gaze squarely, but without any sign of recognition, and Adam rode on. As he talked to Luke the other man came in, passing them with a nod, and entering the house with the air of one at home there.

"Who is he?" queried Adam.

"Talking El, the boys call him, because he nods and smiles instead of speaking, whenever possible. He works at the station, and boards with us at present."

"Then you must think a great deal of him. What is his name?"

"Elmer Jackson. His father has a small ranch in north Alberta. El has a fair education and taught school for a while there, then came here after money and adventure. He brought letters from his church and some friends of mine there, so we took him in, and we do think a good deal of him, though he is oddly silent with strangers."

"He evidently isn't Thlinket's boy then."

"And who may Thlinket's boy be?"

"You must remember Thlinket, Luke, the best hunter and guide near Fort McBrier, when we were boys there together. He was a fine old Indian, and soon after you left he came to us with a six-year-old white boy, Eli Smith, according to the papers Thlinket brought with him. His father was a prospector who had died out in the north, and Thlinket had adopted the boy, whom he seemed very fond of. Yet he brought him to us, thinking it right he should get a white man's learning and religion. Of course my folks took him, though Thlinket always brought furs enough every year to more than pay for the boy's keep. I'm afraid I didn't like him, he was such a lot of trouble at first, such a perfect little savage; then I went away to school, and when I was home Eli was mostly away on his holidays hunting with Thlinket. I didn't notice him much till I stayed at home that year. Eli was fourteen then, and I five years older I thought my folks made too much of him, though he certainly seemed very fond of them. He was clever at his books too, but crazy to go to the Klondyke—it was 1898—to get gold to do a few impossible things. Of course he wasn't let, and then a miner out of the usual track came to the fort with a long story of how he was coming back with his gold, had camped near us, and been robbed of his poke while asleep. He, Jake was his name, accused Eli, who had been fishing before dawn near him, of the theft. Eli denied the charge, and my father sent Jake off without paying much attention to him. He, however, stayed near, and though he was a soured, surly fellow, he seemed honest and a good hunter, and I often went out with him. You remember our secret cache, Luke? The girls had shown it to Eli, and I never went to it till one day I looked in for something, and found Jake's poke of gold carefully hidden away in it. Just then Eli came in, and I taxed him with stealing it. He admitted it, mumbling something about having picked it up, and meaning to give it back to Jake. He made me feel sick, the miserable little thief, but I told him to take it to Jake right then, and he scuttled into his canoe and off with the poke. Well, he wasn't back that night, mother was worrying, and I thought I had better see what he had done. Jake wasn't at his hut, I found him by the river with blood all round him, and a shot in his leg. It didn't seem a dangerous hurt, and while I fixed it he told me that Eli had brought the gold back, and tried to leave it without being seen. But he had seen and chased the boy, catching him by the river, and giving him his choice between a flogging with his dog whip or being taken to my father. Eli chose the first instantly, but Jake after, in his own words, having given the boy a lick or two, decided it would be wiser to take him to the fort. Then he stopped in his story and fairly made the air blue with profanity. 'First he stole my gold,' he yelled, 'then he shot me with my own gun.' And that was evidently just what the young desperado had done."

"I suppose," suggested Luke, as Adam paused, "that the boy resented being told to choose his punishment, and then, as he might think, being given both. Where did you find him?"

"Haven't found him yet, and it's seven years ago now. When I went to get help that night, Jake managed to fill himself with whisky and died in twelve hours without making any further statement. Eli, we guessed, had fled to the Indians, but they denied having seen him; only about the time he would have reached the village, Thlinket suddenly put his things together and disappeared, and neither he nor Eli have been seen since. My father did not believe that Thlinket would have shielded the boy from him, and it is probable that Eli did not tell him of his theft, but only of the man attacking him, and him shooting him in self-defence. Thlinket had no use for the miners anyhow, since a party of them had stolen his best dog team. It brought the whole thing back to me to-day, because I'm off to Hell Creek—sweet name, isn't it?—somewhere in the Klondyke, to find a man who I think is probably Eli."

Luke thought of Adam very often in those next few weeks, journeying carelessly into dangers from savage men and savage elements. For the winter swept on them suddenly, with a succession of whirlwinds of snow and bitter cold. September deranged the mail traffic north of White Horse, and October stopped it, an extra wild storm overturning the stage coach and killing two of the horses. Usually in such a case communication would have been made on the ice by dog sleighs, but the Yukon is an unusual and often unpleasant river. In civilized Canada the rivers freeze decorously on the top, but the Yukon, Arctic-fashion, has ice at its bottom, and freezes up, and for some weeks there is a titanic battle between the Arctic cold and the strong river, which again and again bursts its icy fetters, piling itself and banks with a surging crush of ice blocks. This was particularly noticeable in the White Horse canyon, where even in November the ice was still moving and continually breaking in the middle, though solid on either side, where all vestiges of road or trail were buried under a chaos of ice blocks piled up high in the wildest confusion.

And all the time mail matter was accumulating in White Horse. Three sledges with picked men and dogs finally ventured out to try and reach Dawson with her Christmas mail, nearly two thousand pounds of letters and papers, and betting was very lively in the town they had left, as to whether they would ever be heard of again.

"There's a half a sledge load of mail waiting now to go to the Klondyke camps," said Luke one evening in the middle of November as he sat at the table with his wife, while El knelt near them on the floor, playing with the baby. "I wish I could leave town and take it."

"Luke?" exclaimed Bessie, his wife.

"I've been wondering all day if I possibly couldn't leave everything here, and offer to take it, Bessie. No, I haven't gone suddenly insane, but I am haunted by this verse I read in a magazine, it describes so exactly the conditions in a hundred mining camps, where men are shut up in enforced idleness till spring, with never a word of any church, or of God—with only the saloon:

'Sing the song of Seven Pines as she used to be,
Richest strike among the mines, whisky flowing free.
Every step a gay saloon humming like a bell,
Sixteen thousand belted men dropping down to hell.'

There was a note of anguish in Luke's voice as he repeated the last line, and Bessie said, "Then you think the mail—messages from their friends—might hold some men back—from hell?"

"They might, and the man who brought it, if he could speak, would have a hearing anywhere."

El stood up. "I'll take it," he said. "I wouldn't speak in the meeting here when you wanted me to, because there was something I couldn't tell you of, that I felt was in the way. But if I get through, I'll take it as a sign that there isn't—I'll take my ordination from the storm."

The next morning the sledge was ready, with its team, four strong huskies and the leader, Duke, a gallant Newfoundland. It had its load of seven hundred pounds, part sleeping bags, and food for the men and dogs, and part the precious mail. El had a companion, Peter Kootney, a big Indian, who had volunteered to go with him. And so they started, both men dressed in overall trousers, blanket coats, wool-lined mitts, fur caps with big ear flaps, and moccasins.

The evening of the day found them only a few miles on their journey, in a grim waste of broken ice jammed and heaped between steep banks covered with a dense growth of scrubby trees. That day they had waded up to their waists in icy water, in a temperature much below zero, then crawled on hands and knees along a long slippery shelf of ice which moved ominously beneath them, in a struggle to extricate their sledge, wedged in a fissure between ice blocks. So with the dogs slipping, and scrambling, and pulling, and the men pushing and lifting, the sledge had moved on.

The next time the sledge stuck, the violent exertions of dogs and men caused the ice blocks they were struggling among to turn, the sledge was hurled forward, narrowly missing crushing the dogs, and the whole party barely escaped sliding into one of the river's terrible "breathing places," where the ice is always thin and where many a man and dog team have gone down into the black waters below.

But at last they camped among a thicket of stunted trees on the shore. A big fire was made, and a pot of beans set on to boil. Then the dogs were fed with fish, and their feet looked to, the edges of the ice they had climbed that day were cruelly sharp, and a disabled dog might mean the death of them all. By this time the beans were cooked, with the huge slab of fat pork thrown in on the top of them. This, with a kettle of boiling tea, was the men's supper. After it they put on more beans, got into their sleeping bags, the dogs buried themselves in the snow, and all slept.

For breakfast more tea and pork was made ready, and part of the beans cooked the night before, and frozen solid, were thawed, and eaten with them. Then came another day among the ice packs, with a halt at noon, when the men thawed and ate the rest of their frozen beans, and at night cooked more for the morrow.

"This very good," chuckled Pete. El nodded doubtfully. He was thinking of LeBerge's evil reputation for storms, she being particularly unsheltered from the whirlwinds of the north. And then, sudden as the outflashing of a sword from its sheath, the storm came against them.

"Mush," Pete yelled to the dogs, and Duke faced the terrible wind and snow bravely, though he could do little more than crawl against it. Behind, the men were pushing the sledge, when it stopped. A husky had lain down, refusing to work, and though he yelped shrilly under Pete's merciless lash, get up he would not, and El cut him loose and went on, while Pete cursed fluently the recreant husky, and also all in authority who risked the lives of their servants by giving them balky dogs. A little further on, a second dog balked. This time El cut him loose, and threw all their food off the sledge, and thus lightened, the three dogs and the men were able, at last, to reach the shore with the mail bags. Utterly exhausted they huddled all together, men and dogs, under some friendly trees, while the snow buried them, saving them from dying in the almost unbearable cold that came with the night.

A day and a night they lay there, suffering cruelly from frost bites and hunger, and waiting to see if death or a lull in the storm would come first. Then, as suddenly as it had come, the blizzard passed, and guided by the dogs, they found their food, and ate while they rested warmly by their fire.

Meanwhile, El thought, since leaving White Horse they had passed no human habitation, and were still some miles from the next station, where the police would give them more dogs and food. So he told Pete they would leave their supplies, and travel fasting to the post, as three dogs could only draw the mail.

The Indian stood up with an ugly gleam in his eyes. "No good, El," he snapped rudely. "Ice bad, not get to post till after one sleep. No grub, die. So we cache mail here, and take grub." Pete drew himself up truculently. He knew that El was connected with missionaries, and he was curious to see if a man who never swore or drank could and would fight.

Before he finished speaking, before he could reach his own weapon, El's revolver was out. "In the king's name," he said coolly, "which means you are going to take this mail on. See?"

The Indian's black, beady eyes searched the other man's face to see if he meant to carry out his unspoken threat, then convinced, nodded his surrender. "You smart, quick man, El," he said with something like admiration. "But you big fool, too, to die skidoo for heap no good papers. Guess 'E. R.' is a big thing sure."

But twenty-four hours later the police at the next post took in two stumbling, half-frozen men, with three hungry dogs. Then after a rest they went on again with fresh dogs, into an Arctic wilderness where their load grew lighter as they left bag after bag at the places they were directed to. They had adventures many-fold, among ice packs and blizzards, and through forests that were dense thickets tangled with heaps of dead timber. And all the while it grew colder down to a steady sixty below zero, and when resting after extra hard spells of labor getting the sledge through a tight place, they had to bury their legs in snow to keep their feet from freezing. And it was very near to Christmas, while only one mail bag remained on the sledge, marked for Hell Creek.

Hell Creek rather deserved its name that Christmas eve. Given four thousand men with nothing whatever to do, cut them off from all the restraints of Christian civilization, intoxicate them with the possession of sudden wealth, and add thereto whisky everywhere and a score of women, the scum of civilized cities, even men who had homes they meant to take their gold back to, forgot them that night, and were indeed "dropping into hell."

The biggest saloon in Hell Creek was Mike Malone's well-named Trap, and there Adam McNabb was that Christmas eve. He had been disappointed at finding the man he went for was certainly not Thlinket's boy, he could not leave the camp till the weather was more settled, and he had gone to the saloon because he could not live entirely without human companionship. And now that night he stood with Chiquita, the Mexican, on the brink of the eternal pit.

Outside there was storm, but a sound came through its roar that sobered every man in the big room. "A sledge out to-night," cried Adam, as he threw open the door, and a blast swept in sending him staggering back to the wall, and hurling in among the crowd what seemed a moving snowdrift, but which dissolved into a dog sledge with two men, who reeled in the sudden light and warmth. The Christmas mail had reached Hell Creek.

There was an unnatural quiet in the camp that night. For the first time the Trap had closed its bar, and Mike was sitting by himself staring at a cheap, gaudy Christmas postcard, with a few words scrawled on it in a young child's hand. His wife was dead, and friends were keeping the baby he had come north to get rich for. But he had never meant to do the things he had; he could never put the gold that was the price of souls into his little Katie's hands. And that night he prayed.

El was fast asleep in Adam's room, and Adam was awake reading his mother's letter. And because he saw that night his own exceeding sinfulness and weakness, the heart of Adam was changed within him, and he went to the strength of God for safety.

Christmas morning found the camp about half as noisy as usual, and comparatively sober and sane. Adam was reading his second letter, an official one, notifying him that the old rancher Jackson had been seen and recognized as Thlinket, and that Eli Smith must be looked for somewhere in the Yukon as Elmer Jackson. Adam was sorry and very surprised. Theft, in his mind, was the sure brand of a coward or a weakling, and he did not see how the man who had brought the Christmas mail to Hell Creek could be either. Still, even on Christmas day he must do his duty, and he went to find El.

El stood at the bar talking to Mike, with the usual crowd of loungers round. Their rough admiration had excited the young man out of the rather unnatural silence and gravity, and he looked very like the lively Eli Adam remembered so well. Adam did not mean to shame him before the others, though his heart hardened against him, he saw the notice above the bar, there would be a service there that afternoon, preaching by "Talking El," the mail runner. Adam's fathers had been Presbyterians of the old school, and though as a Christian he might pity a repentant thief, he felt very stern against this man who dared to lay dishonest hands on the holy things of God.

"I want to speak to you, Eli Smith," he said quietly, and without any sign of confusion at the sound of his name, El walked into the side room, where he dropped on a pile of blankets by the stove, as Adam followed him, and shut the door.

"This is solid comfort," said El as he sprawled there in lazy content. "Don't look so frightfully solemn, Adam, man. I know what it is you want to say to me, but we can't either of us leave the camp till it clears, so don't say it now—it's Christmas day."

"Very well," said Adam grimly, though he was bewildered. Criminal braggadocio he knew, but El's perfect ease of manner was unlike any that he had seen. "It is Christmas, but you must call off your preaching. I can't stand for that."

There was anger and astonishment in El's eyes as he answered, "You're too blamed autocratic for this country, Adam. The boys want me to speak to-day, and I certainly shall. If you don't like it, you can emigrate to Russia, where your minding other people's business may be appreciated."

Adam gasped. Men had defied him before, but they had never done it lying on the floor, blinking cat-like at a fire. Then he said: "Either you have the most stupendous nerve of any man I ever met or there's a mistake somewhere. Are you, or are you not Thlinket's boy?"

"I'm Thlinket's boy all right," said El quietly, then he sat up on the blankets. "I've something to tell you, Adam, and I might as well say it now. Sit down, man."

Vague memories of a formula cautioning El against saying anything that might be used in evidence against him, flitted across Adam's mind, but, too bewildered to say it or anything, he sat down, while El said: "Jake told you how Thlinket stole his gold and then shot him, but I guess he didn't say he stole Thlinket's dogs a year before. Indians don't forget, and Thlinket trailed him for hundreds of miles, wanting to kill him, but afraid of the white man's law. At last he took his gold, just for revenge; he only meant to throw it away. I know he was round Jake's camp that morning, and that he had put a parcel in my cache that I mustn't touch, but I never dreamt what it was till you charged me with the theft. I was afraid of being questioned and betraying Thlinket if I denied it. Then I took the gold back, and though I wasn't the thief, I carry the marks of a thief's punishment on me to-day. Jake half killed me with his whip before he said he was going to take me to the fort, too, and then Thlinket came upon us. I guess when Jake told you how Thlinket said it was he that took the gold, he left out that then he fired at Thlinket and missed, before Thlinket, who was unarmed, threw himself on him, and Jake was shot in the struggle. Thlinket took me off in his canoe, and we hid. The Indians lied to you to help us, and Thlinket unwisely fled with me when he heard Jake had died. We were in the States for two years, then I got him to settle in Alberta. I thought he woul be safe on that lonely ranch, shielded by my openness and respectability. But I knew you suspected my identity when we met in White Horse, and that you would soon track Thlinket down. And now, what are you going to do? Thlinket is an old man, and he will die if you put him in prison. I can prove the shooting of Jake was accidental. And I took the punishment for stealing the gold. Perhaps you think I don't understand the law, but is it God's justice that a man should be punished for a crime that another has suffered for?"

"There is something else you don't understand," said Adam gently. "I never knew till now that it was not you who had both robbed and shot Jake. It was you we have been looking for these years, and whom I was to arrest to-day."

El sprang up with clenched fists and blazing eyes. "And you let me talk on and betray him," he cried. "You set a trap, you skunk."

Adam did not move. "Trap isn't a pretty word, El," he said quietly, "and if you think a minute, you'll know it isn't true."

"I beg your pardon," said El heavily, then he laughed unsteadily. "It's a bit of a shock to know I'm legally a thief when I've been rather proud of being the reverse. But I want you to forget, officially, that is, what I told you. You'll take me back, and I'll say nothing; your law will do the rest."

"I'll not take you anywhere, El, but I know you'll go back to Fort McBrier, to tell the truth. You would have saved yourself a lot by not saying the other thing at first, though I was much to blame then. Then Thlinket must come back too, and he needn't be afraid of prison, now that we can show the shooting was accidental. Old McBrier is a lot bigger place than when you left, but my father's factor there still, and I guess you can trust him to see there's no injustice done. And you must forget what I said about your preaching. I can't tell you just yet what your bringing the Christmas mail meant to me, but I want, for the first time, to really keep Christmas to-day."

The Porcupine Market

The Porcupine Camp is now nearing the production stage, as the stamp mills will probably begin to crush the vast amount of rich ore within the next six weeks.

The recent depression in the staple stocks, such as Dome Extension, Vipond, Hollinger, Rea, Jupiter, Preston, East Dome and Crown Chartered, is not, in our estimation, warranted. We are advised the underground development on these properties to be exceeding all expectations and important announcements may be expected within a few days, which will probably cause a sharp advance.

WE STRONGLY ADVISE THE IMMEDIATE PURCHASE OF THESE STOCKS AT CURRENT PRICES.

We issue a weekly Market Letter, which contains unbiased opinions regarding the actually developed properties of both Porcupine and Cobalt, together with the latest news pertaining to actual mine conditions. Sent free on request.

We will be glad to execute orders for the purchase or sale of active listed mining stocks, either for cash or on margin of 33 1-3 per cent., and will accept certificates when properly endorsed, as collateral margin against purchases.

ONE OF BOB'S BEST BOOSTS

Robert Hilliard, the actor, who stars in the role of a hero, went to a physician not long ago and was told that he would have to undergo a slight operation, says the Popular Magazine.

"All right, doctor," said Hilliard. "There's only one thing I ask of you: Please don't hurt me."

Explaining that it would be foolish to administer an anæsthetic for such a slight operation, the doctor promised to be as gentle as possible. Hilliard squirmed and wriggled and protested in no uncertain tones while the remedial knife was doing its work.

After it was all over the doctor asked:

"You're a actor, aren't you, Mr. Hilliard?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Hilliard.

"And you play heroic roles—you act the hero, do you not?"

"Yes, I do."

"Well," concluded the doctor, "all I've got to say is that you're a good actor."

BOY IN A TREADMILL

James Whippany, ten years old, of Belleville, N.J., while visiting the ruins of the Moffat rolling mills in Glen Ridge with a number of companions, had a practical experience of the treadmill formerly use dfor the employment of convicts in European prisons.

The boy climbed up on the old mill wheel, which, motionless for years, began to turn. In order to save himself the lad was compelled to step up to each blade as it turned slowly around. It seemed amusing at first, but as the motion of the wheel increased, Whippany began to tire and he called for aid from his companions. They procured two planks with which they blocked the wheel.—New York American.

Thlinket's Boy

The Story of a Klondike Christmas

BY E. A. TAYLOR IN THE WESTMINSTER.

Yukon Territory is a land where man find gold and death. Across its north curves the terrible girdle of the Arctic Circle. At its south are heaped up barriers of snow capped mountains, gateless except for the White Pass and dreaded Chilcott, where so many died in the mad trail of '98 by the sword of the storm, when the north winds were unleashed while they were there above shelter.

To-day the railway has climbed through the White Pass, and has its terminus at White Horse, one of the twenty stations of the Mounted Police from White Pass summit to Dawson, in the Klondyke—five hundred miles.

White Horse is a little town set among a chaos of rock and glacier. Above it is Lake Arlin among the snow mantled mountains, whose waters pour down through the terrible White Horse canyon and rapids to Lake LeBerge. Beyond that are more of the wildest rapids ever penned in black fanged canyons, and out of this war of waters the great river Yukon is born.

Adam McNabb, of the Mounted Police, was riding his splendid mare down the steep trail to White Horse that August afternoon. He was young, and good looking in his uniform of scarlet jacket and black breeches with a yellow stripe down each leg. Also he carried a repeating rifle, and was agreeably conscious that he represented the majesty of imperial law.

He was on his way to visit his friend, Luke Moore, a missionary, who had a real home in White Horse, furnished with a wife and baby. The men were close friends, though Adam flippantly called himself a Sadducee, asserting that if a man lives straight in this world he need not trouble about another, and plumed himself on neither, believing or disbelieving anything in religion. He was impossible to be argued with, and Luke never did.

Adam was close to the missionary's house when he saw a man, evidently intending to visit there too. "He's a white man all right," he thought, after a long look at the other, "though he walks like an Indian. Of course it couldn't be him, but he certainly has a look of Thlinket's boy."

He rode into the canyon and met the stranger. He looked about twenty, a young man with the features of the Scandinavian people who met the policeman's gaze squarely, but without any sign of recognition, and Adam rode on. As he talked to Luke the other man came in, passing them with a nod, and entering the house with the air of one at home there.

"Who is he?" queried Adam.

"Talking El, the boys call him, because he nods and smiles instead of speaking, whenever possible. He works at the station, and boards with us at present."

"Then you must think a great deal of him. What is his name?"

"Elmer Jackson. His father has a small ranch in north Alberta. El has a fair education and taught school for a while there, then came here after money and adventure. He brought letters from his church and some friends of mine there, so we took him in, and we do think a good deal of him, though he is oddly silent with strangers."

"He evidently isn't Thlinket's boy then."

"And who may Thlinket's boy be?"

"You must remember Thlinket, Luke, the best hunter and guide near Fort McBrier, when we were boys there together. He was a fine old Indian, and soon after you left he came to us with a six-year-old white boy, Eli Smith, according to the papers Thlinket brought with him. His father was a prospector who had died out in the north, and Thlinket had adopted the boy, whom he seemed very fond of. Yet he brought him to us, thinking it right he should get a white man's learning and religion. Of course my folks took him, though Thlinket always brought furs enough every year to more than pay for the boy's keep. I'm afraid I didn't like him, he was such a lot of trouble at first, such a perfect little savage; then I went away to school, and when I was home Eli was mostly away on his holidays hunting with Thlinket. I didn't notice him much till I stayed at home that year. Eli was fourteen then, and I five years older I thought my folks made too much of him, though he certainly seemed very fond of them. He was clever at his books too, but crazy to go to the Klondyke—it was 1898—to get gold to do a few impossible things. Of course he wasn't let, and then a miner out of the usual track came to the fort with a long story of how he was coming back with his gold, had camped near us, and been robbed of his poke while asleep. He, Jake was his name, accused Eli, who had been fishing before dawn near him, of the theft. Eli denied the charge, and my father sent Jake off without paying much attention to him. He, however, stayed near, and though he was a soured, surly fellow, he seemed honest and a good hunter, and I often went out with him. You remember our secret cache, Luke? The girls had shown it to Eli, and I never went to it till one day I looked in for something, and found Jake's poke of gold carefully hidden away in it. Just then Eli came in, and I taxed him with stealing it. He admitted it, mumbling something about having picked it up, and meaning to give it back to Jake. He made me feel sick, the miserable little thief, but I told him to take it to Jake right then, and he scuttled into his canoe and off with the poke. Well, he wasn't back that night, mother was worrying, and I thought I had better see what he had done. Jake wasn't at his hut. I found him by the river with blood all round him, and a shot in his leg. It didn't seem a dangerous hurt, and while I fixed it he told me that Eli had brought the gold back, and tried to leave it without being seen. But he had seen and chased the boy, catching him by the river, and giving him his choice between a flogging with his dog whip or being taken to my father. Eli chose the first instantly, but Jake after, in his own words, having given the boy a lick or two, decided it would be wiser to take him to the fort. Then he stopped in his story and fairly made the air blue with profanity. 'First he stole my gold,' he yelled, 'then he shot me with my own gun.' And that was evidently just what the young desperado had done."

"I suppose," suggested Luke, as Adam paused, "that the boy resented being told to choose his punishment, and then, as he might think, being given both. Where did you find him?"

"Haven't found him yet, and it's seven years ago now. When I went to get help that night, Jake managed to fill himself with whisky and died in twelve hours without making any further statement. Eli, we guessed, had fled to the Indians, but they denied having seen him; only about the time he would have reached the village, Thlinket suddenly put his things together and disappeared, and neither he nor Eli have been seen since. My father did not believe that Thlinket would have shielded the boy from him, and it is probable that Eli did not tell him of his theft, but only of the man attacking him, and him shooting him in self-defence. Thlinket had no use for the miners anyhow, since a party of them had stolen his best dog team. It brought the whole thing back to me to-day, because I'm off to Hell Creek—sweet name, isn't it?—somewhere in the Klondyke, to find a man who I think is probably Eli."

Luke thought of Adam very often in those next few weeks, journeying carelessly into dangers from savage men and savage elements. For the winter swept on them suddenly, with a succession of whirlwinds of snow and bitter cold. September deranged the mail traffic north of White Horse, and October stopped it, an extra wild storm overturning the stage coach and killing two of the horses. Usually in such a case communication would have been made on the ice by dog sleighs, but the Yukon is an unusual and often unpleasant river. In civilized Canada the rivers freeze decorously on the top, but the Yukon, Arctic-fashion, has ice at its bottom, and freezes up, and for some weeks there is a titanic battle between the Arctic cold and the strong river, which again and again bursts its icy fetters, piling itself and banks with a surging crush of ice blocks. This was particularly noticeable in the White Horse canyon, where even in November the ice was still moving and continually breaking in the middle, though solid on either side, where all vestiges of road or trail were buried under a chaos of ice blocks piled up high in the wildest confusion.

And all the time mail matter was accumulating in White Horse. Three sledges with picked men and dogs finally ventured out to try and reach Dawson with her Christmas mail, nearly two thousand pounds of letters and papers, and betting was very lively in the town they had left, as to whether they would ever be heard of again.

"There's half a sledge load of mail waiting now to go to the Klondyke camps," said Luke one evening in the middle of November as he sat at the table with his wife, while El knelt near them on the floor, playing with the baby. "I wish I could leave town and take it."

"Why, Luke?" exclaimed Bessie, his wife.

"I've been wondering all day if I possibly couldn't leave everything here, and offer to take it, Bessie. No, I haven't gone suddenly insane, but I am haunted by this verse I read in a magazine, it describes so exactly the conditions in a hundred mining camps, where men are shut up in enforced idleness till spring, with never a word of any church, or of God—with only the saloon:

'Sing the song of Seven Pines as she used to be,
Richest strike among the mines, whisky flowing free.
Every step a gay saloon humming like a bell,
Sixteen thousand belted men dropping down to hell.'

There was a note of anguish in Luke's voice as he repeated the last line, and Bessie said, "Then you think the mail—messages from their friends—might hold some men back—from hell?"

"They might, and the man who brought it, if he could speak, would have a hearing anywhere."

El stood up. "I'll take it," he said. "I wouldn't speak in the meeting here when you wanted me to, because there was something I couldn't tell you of, that I felt was in the way. But if I get through, I'll take it as a sign that there isn't—I'll take my ordination from the storm."

The next morning the sledge was ready, with its team, four strong huskies and the leader, Duke, a gallant Newfoundland. It had its load of seven hundred pounds, part sleeping bags, and food for the men and dogs, and part the precious mail. El had a companion, Peter Kootney, a big Indian, who had volunteered to go with him. And so they started, both men dressed in overall trousers, blanket coats, wool-lined mitts, fur caps with big ear flaps, and moccasins.

The evening of the day found them only a few miles on their journey, in a grim waste of broken ice jammed and heaped between steep banks covered with a dense growth of scrubby trees. That day they had waded up to their waists in icy water, in a temperature much below zero, then crawled on hands and knees along a long slippery shelf of ice which moved ominously beneath them, in a struggle to extricate their sledge, wedged in a fissure between ice blocks. So with the dogs slipping, and scrambling, and pulling, and the men pushing and lifting, the sledge had moved on.

The next time the sledge stuck, the violent exertions of dogs and men caused the ice blocks they were struggling among to turn, the sledge was hurled forward, narrowly missing crushing the dogs, and the whole party barely escaped sliding into one of the river's terrible "breathing places," where the ice is always thin and where many a man and dog team have gone down into the black waters below.

But at last they camped among a thicket of stunted trees on the shore. A big fire was made, and a pot of beans set on to boil. Then the dogs were fed with fish, and their feet looked to, the edges of the ice they had climbed that day were cruelly sharp, and a disabled dog might mean the death of them all. By this time the beans were cooked, with the huge slab of fat pork thrown in on the top of them. This, with a kettle of boiling tea, was the men's supper. After it they put on more beans, got into their sleeping bags, the dogs buried themselves in the snow, and all slept.

For breakfast more tea and pork was made ready, and part of the beans cooked the night before, and frozen solid, were thawed, and eaten with them. Then came another day among the ice packs, with a halt at noon, when the men thawed and ate the rest of their frozen beans, and at night cooked more for the morrow.

"This very good," chuckled Pete. El nodded doubtfully. He was thinking of LeBerge's evil reputation for storms, she being particularly unsheltered from the whirlwinds of the north. And then, sudden as the outflashing of a sword from its sheath, the storm came against them.

"Mush," Pete yelled to the dogs, and Duke faced the terrible wind and snow bravely, though he could do little more than crawl against it. Behind, the men were pushing the sledge, when it stopped. A husky had lain down, refusing to work, and though he yelped shrilly under Pete's merciless lash, get up he would not, and El cut him loose and went on, while Pete cursed fluently the recreant husky, and also all in authority who risked the lives of their servants by giving them balky dogs. A little further on, a second dog balked. This time El cut him loose, and threw all their food off the sledge, and thus lightened, the three dogs and the men were able, at last, to reach the shore with the mail bags. Utterly exhausted they huddled all together, men and dogs, under some friendly trees, while the snow buried them, saving them from dying in the almost unbearable cold that came with the night.

A day and a night they lay there, suffering cruelly from frost bites and hunger, and waiting to see if death or a lull in the storm would come first. Then, as suddenly as it had come, the blizzard passed, and guided by the dogs, they found their food, and ate while they rested warmly by their fire.

Meanwhile, El thought, since leaving White Horse they had passed no human habitation, and were still some miles from the next station, where the police would give them more dogs and food. So he told Pete they would leave their supplies, and travel fasting to the post, as three dogs could only draw the mail.

The Indian stood up with an ugly gleam in his eyes. "No good, El," he snapped rudely. "Ice bad, not get to post till after one sleep. No grub, di So we cache mail here, and take grub." Pete drew himself up truculently. He knew that El was connected with missionaries, and he was curious to see if a man who never swore or drank could and would fight.

Before he finished speaking, before he could reach his own weapon, El's revolver was out. "In the king's name," he said coolly, "which means you are going to take this mail on. See?"

The Indian's black, beady eyes searched the other man's face to see if he meant to carry out his unspoken threat, then convinced, nodded his surrender. "You smart, quick man, El," he said with something like admiration. "But you big fool, too, to die skidoo for heap no good papers. Guess 'E. R.' is a big thing sure."

But twenty-four hours later the police at the next post took in two stumbling, half-frozen men, with three hungry dogs. Then after a rest they went on again with fresh dogs, into an Arctic wilderness where their load grew lighter as they left bag after bag at the places they were directed to. They had adventures many-fold, among ice packs and blizzards, and through forests that were dense thickets tangled with heaps of dead timber. And all the while it grew colder down to a steady sixty below zero, and when resting after extra hard spells of labor getting the sledge through a tight place, they had to bury their legs in snow to keep their feet from freezing. And it was very near to Christmas, while only one mail bag remained on the sledge, marked for Hell Creek.

Hell Creek rather deserved its name that Christmas eve. Given four thousand men with nothing whatever to do, cut them off from all the restraints of Christian civilization, intoxicate them with the possession of sudden wealth, and add thereto whisky everywhere and a score of women, the scum of civilized cities, even men who had homes they meant to take their gold back to, forgot them that night, and were indeed "dropping into hell."

The biggest saloon in Hell Creek was Mike Malone's well-named Trap, and there Adam McNabb was that Christmas eve. He had been disappointed at finding the man he went for was certainly not Thlinket's boy, he could not leave the camp till the weather was more settled, and he had gone to the saloon because he could not live entirely without human companionship. And now that night he stood with Chiquita, the Mexican, on the brink of the eternal pit.

Outside there was storm, but a sound came through its roar that sobered every man in the big room. "A sledge out to-night," cried Adam, as he threw open the door, and a blast swept in sending him staggering back to the wall, and hurling in among the crowd what seemed a moving snowdrift, but which dissolved into a dog sledge with two men, who reeled in the sudden light and warmth. The Christmas mail had reached Hell Creek.

There was an unnatural quiet in the camp that night. For the first time the Trap had closed its bar, and Mike was sitting by himself staring at a cheap, gaudy Christmas postcard, with a few words scrawled on it in a young child's hand. His wife was dead, and friends were keeping the baby he had come north to get rich for. But he had never meant to do the things he had; he could never put the gold that was the price of souls into his little Katie's hands. And that night he prayed.

El was fast asleep in Adam's room, and Adam was awake reading his mother's letter. And because he saw that night his own exceeding sinfulness and weakness, the heart of Adam was changed within him, and he went to the strength of God for safety.

Christmas morning found the camp about half as noisy as usual, and comparatively sober and sane. Adam was reading his second letter, an official one, notifying him that the old rancher Jackson had been seen and recognised as Thlinket, and that Eli Smith must be looked for somewhere in the Yukon as Elmer Jackson. Adam was sorry and very surprised. Theft, in his mind, was the sure brand of a coward or a weakling, and he did not see how the man who had brought the Christmas mail to Hell Creek could be either. Still, even on Christmas day he must do his duty, and he went to find El.

El stood at the bar talking to Mike, with the usual crowd of loungers round. Their rough admiration had excited the young man out of the rather unnatural silence and gravity, and he looked very like the lively Eli Adam remembered so well. Adam did not mean to shame him before the others, though his heart hardened against him, he saw the notice above the bar, there would be a service there that afternoon, preaching by "Talking El," the mail runner. Adam's fathers had been Presbyterians of the old school, and though as a Christian he might pity a repentant thief, he felt very stern against this man who dared to lay dishonest hands on the holy things of God.

"I want to speak to you, Eli Smith," he said quietly, and without any sign of confusion at the sound of his name, El walked into the side room, where he dropped on a pile of blankets by the stove, as Adam followed him, and shut the door.

"This is solid comfort," said El as he sprawled there in lazy content. "Don't look so frightfully solemn, Adam, man. I know what it is you want to say to me, but we can't either of us leave the camp till it clears, so don't say it now—it's Christmas day."

"Very well," said Adam grimly, though he was bewildered. Criminal braggadocio he knew, but El's perfect ease of manner was unlike any that he had seen. "It is Christmas, but you must call off your preaching. I can't stand for that."

There was anger and astonishment in El's eyes as he answered, "You're too blamed autocratic for this country, Adam. The boys want me to speak to-day, and I certainly shall. If you don't like it, you can emigrate to Russia, where your minding other people's business may be appreciated."

Adam gasped. Men had defied him before, but they had never done it lying on the floor, blinking cat-like at a fire. Then he said: "Either you have the most stupendous nerve of any man I ever met or there's a mistake somewhere. Are you, or are you not Thlinket's boy?"

"I'm Thlinket's boy all right," said El quietly, then he sat up on the blankets. "I've something to tell you, Adam, and I might as well say it now. Sit down, man."

Vague memories of a formula cautioning El against saying anything that might be used in evidence against him flitted across Adam's mind, but, too bewildered to say it or anything, he sat down, while El said: "Jake told you how Thlinket stole his gold and then shot him, but I guess he didn't say he stole Thlinket's dogs a year before. Indians don't forget, and Thlinket trailed him for hundreds of miles, wanting to kill him, but afraid of the white man's law. At last he took his gold, just for revenge; he only meant to throw it away. I know he was round Jake's camp that morning, and that he had put a parcel in my cache that I mustn't touch, but I never dreamt what it was till you charged me with the theft. I was afraid of being questioned and betraying Thlinket if I denied it. Then I took the gold back, and though I wasn't the thief, I carry the marks of a thief's punishment on me to-day. Jake half killed me with his whip before he said he was going to take me to the fort, too, and then Thlinket came upon us. I guess when Jake told you how Thlinket said it was he that took the gold, he left out that then he fired at Thlinket and missed, before Thlinket, who was unarmed, threw himself on him, and Jake was shot in the struggle. Thlinket took me off in his canoe, and we hid. The Indians lied to you to help us, and Thlinket unwisely fled with me when he heard Jake had died. We were in the States for two years, then I got him to settle in Alberta. I thought he woul be safe on that lonely ranch, shielded by my openness and respectability. But I knew you suspected my identity when we met in White Horse, and that you would soon track Thlinket down. And now, what are you going to do? Thlinket is an old man, and he will die if you put him in prison. I can prove the shooting of Jake was accidental. And I took the punishment for stealing the gold. Perhaps you think I don't understand the law, but is it God's justice that a man should be punished for a crime that another has suffered for?"

"There is something else you don't understand," said Adam gently. "I never knew till now that it was not you who had both robbed and shot Jake. It was you we have been looking for these years, and whom I was to arrest to-day."

El sprang up with clenched fists and blazing eyes. "And you let me talk on and betray him," he cried. "You set a trap, you skunk."

Adam did not move. "Trap isn't a pretty word, El," he said quietly, "and if you think a minute, you'll know it isn't true."

"I beg your pardon," said El heavily, then he laughed unsteadily. It's a bit of a shock to know I'm legally a thief when I've been rather proud of being the reverse. But I want you to forget, officially, that is, what I told you. You'll take me back, and I'll say nothing; your law will do the rest."

"I'll not take you anywhere, El, but I know you'll go back to Fort McBrier, to tell the truth. You would have saved yourself a lot by not saying the other thing at first, though I was much to blame then. Then Thlinket must come back too, and he needn't be afraid of prison, now that we can show the shooting was accidental. Old McBrier is a lot bigger place than when you left, but my father's factor there still, and I guess you can trust him to see there's no injustice done. And you must forget what I said about your preaching. I can't tell you just yet what your bringing the Christmas mail meant to me, but I want, for the first time, to really keep Christmas to-day."

The Porcupine Market

The Porcupine Camp is now nearing the production stage, as the stamp mills will probably begin to crush the vast amount of rich ore within the next six weeks.

The recent depression in the staple stocks, such as Dome Extension, Vipond, Hollinger, Rea, Jupiter, Preston, East Dome and Crown Chartered, is not, in our estimation, warranted. We are advised the underground development on these properties to be exceeding all expectations and important announcements may be expected within a few days, which will probably cause a sharp advance.

We issue a weekly Market Letter, which contains unbiased opinions regarding the actually developed properties of both Porcupine and Cobalt, together with the latest news pertaining to actual mine conditions. Sent free on request.

We will be glad to execute orders for the purchase or sale of active listed mining stocks, either for cash or on margin of 33 1-3 per cent., and will accept certificates when properly endorsed, as collateral margin against purchasers.

ONE OF BOB'S BEST BOOSTS

Robert Hilliard, the actor, who stars in the role of a hero, went to a physician not long ago and was told that he would have to undergo a slight operation, says the Popular Magazine.

"All right, doctor," said Hilliard. "There's only one thing I ask of you: Please don't hurt me."

Explaining that it would be foolish to administer an anæsthetic for such a slight operation, the doctor promised to be as gentle as possible. Hilliard squirmed and wriggled and protested in no uncertain tones while the remedial knife was doing its work.

After it was all over the doctor asked:

"You're a actor, aren't you, Mr. Hilliard?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Hilliard.

"And you play heroic roles—you act the hero, do you not?"

"Yes, I do."

BOY IN A TREADMILL

James Whippany, ten years old, of Belleville, N.J., while visiting the ruins of the Moffat rolling mills in Glen Ridge with a number of companions, had a practical experience of the treadmill formerly use dfor the employment of convicts in European prisons.

The boy climbed up on the old mill wheel, which, motionless for years, began to turn. In order to save himself the lad was compelled to step up to each blade as it turned slowly around. It seemed amusing at first, but as the motion of the wheel increased, Whippany began to tire and he called for aid from his companions. They procured two planks with which they blocked the wheel.—New York American.

BLIZZARD'S SURPRISE

A YULETIDE STORY

When Professor Smith's "Private School for Boys" closed for the Christmas holidays, the pupils were a happy lot, and turned merrily towards their respective homes. Most of them lived in the city where the school was held; but a few came from distant towns and farms. Two of the latter were Charlie Perry and Jack Paine. Their homes were in an adjoining county some fifteen miles distant from the city. Their fathers were rich farmers, living on neighbouring farms. Thus it was that Charlie and Jack had been friends and chums from babyhood, and the boys at the school whispered that Charlie's pretty little sweetheart (whose picture Charlie kept so carefully put away in his trunk, and which he showed only to the boys he "liked and honoured") was none other than Jack's fourteen-year-old sister whom he talked about a good deal. But Charlie never mentioned his sweetheart's name in public. He held her too dear to do that. But Jack—the big sixteen-year-old brother—talked of her whenever the opportunity came to do so. "My sister Gracie is a brick, boys," he would boast. "She can skate, play tennis, golf, ride horseback—do any old thing a boy can do, and lots of brave things besides. I tell you, a boy doesn't understand a girl's worth unless he's got a siser."

And Charlie would blush a bright red, and show his embarrassment, but at the same time would nod his head emphatically.

And so it was that Charlie and Jack had more than the tie of chumship to hold them together. They roomed togther at school, were of the same age and in the same classes. So when the holidays came, they planned to make the trip to their homes on foot, "tramping it," as they expressed it.

"Looks pretty heavy in the northwest," said Jack, eyeing the sky as they started out through the big gate which led to the school grounds. "It's the time of year for a good old blow and snow, if one can go on past weather records."

"Yes, but the roads are fine, and neighbours all along the line," reminded Charlie. "We'll cover the distance beore night—if we walk as fast as we should."

The first seven miles was passed over without weariness, but at the end of the stretch, both boys began to fag just a wee bit. Jack was the first to acknowledge it, and Charlie "fessed up" to the same condition of legs and feet.

"Let's stop at that farm house yonder," proposed Jack, pointing to a group of farm buildings a mile distant. "It's as hungry as a wolf I am, and it's a hearty meal I could consume—were I asked to so indulge."

"Wouldn't mind tasting that thing called grub, myself," smiled Charlie, "especially such victuals as the farmer-women prepare. Say, we don't get such things to eat in the city as we get at our own homes."

"That's because the school hasn't any mother—nor sisters," exclaimed Jack. "Gee, what would a home be like without the women and girls in it?"

"I'd hate to contemplate what it would be like without mother," said Charlie, and his tone held reverence in it. "But—look back of you, old chap!"

Jack turned to look in the direction his chum had indicated, and he gave an exclamation of surprise and anxiety. "Gee, whiz!" he exclaimed. "It's a blizzard coming—or I'm no judge of weather-signs."

"We can make the journey before it breaks—unless we find the hospitality yonder too inviting to allow of our continuing to-day." And Charlie pointed towards the nearing farmhouse in the distance.

"We'll stop for just a bite of bread and a drink of hot coffee," said Jack. "When that norther comes, it will last for days. We can't stay housed up among strangers—wearing out our welcome—for that length of time."

Then they hastened their footsteps and soon turned in at the lane leading to the farmhouse, and the farmer's wife invited them into the big, warm kitchen, and said she would fix them some dinner at once. "It's nearly one o'clock," she said, "and our dinner is over; but there's plenty left for two fine young fellows like yourselves."

As the boys ate the appetizing meal set or them, they told the farmer's wife who they were, and she knew all about their fathers and mothers. "Why, the Perrys and the Paines!" she exclaimed. "Well, their boys are indeed welcome to all that I have to offer them. Say, my own boys will arrive from town pretty soon. Can't you stay and meet them? They are as fine as are on top the earth—if I do say so." And the mother-pride was in the good woman's voice. But Jack and Charlie declined the cordial invitation, and said they would be obliged to hasten on their way, as a storm was brewing in the north-west. The farmer came in at that moment and confirmed what they said. "It's a blizzard, mind me," he declared, and shook his head. "You young fellers would better stop over night with us."

Charlie and Jack thanked their kind hostess and host, but set out again. About seven miles lay between them and Jack's home. They calculated that they could easily cover the distance within two and a half hours, though fast walking was not really advisable as one gave out so quickly, and was obliged to rest often. They knew that a rather slow, swinging gait would carry them along better.

They felt the fall of temperature soon after they left the farmhouse, but their lunch had given them renewed strength and vigour. They went along, talking very little, knowing that pedestrians need all their strength, and hat talking in a heavy wind soon exhausts one. They kept tight lips and breathed deeply through their noses. They were athletic boys, and knew all about the best methods of walking, riding, rowing, skating and wrestling.

After having left their kind host and hostess two miles behind, Jack and Charlie came to a stretch of high, barren land, used in summer as a grazing ground for cattle and sheep by the nearby farmers. There was no sort of habitation for three miles of the road, and the winds swept the hills with fury.

The boys shivered as they mounted to the top of the first range. The narrow valleys gave some relief, however, and they would catch breath for the next climb. But they realized that they were confronting a serious thing—a blizzard! It was bursting in full fury upon them, and no shelter of any kind in sight.

"We might push forward to old Jones' shanty—beyond the creek, or return to our newly-found friends," suggested aJck, walking backwards to get his breath.

"eLt's not turn back," said Charlie. "We'll have to put in at Jones' hut."

So on they went, making slow progress, for the wind, laden with snow, almost took them off their feet. And the snow and sleet were so thick in the heavy gusts coming from the north, that the boys could scarcely keep their eyes open to see their way, and it also shut off their view a hundred yards ahead of them. Both felt a fear that neither would voice.

After much difficulty, the boys reached a path leading from the road to Jones' prairie shanty, and turned into it. When they came to the door of the house, and knocked with all their might, there came no answer. On endeavouring to open the door, they found it securely locked.

"He's gone from home," exclaimed Jack. "Now, what shall we do?"

"Go in anyway," replied Charlie. "We can't stand on ceremony in the midst of a blizzard. Come, let's try the window. There's one on the other side the shack."

Soon the boys had the window opened, and were inside the cold one-roomed shanty. They found some wood piled behind the stove, and a box of coal just outside the door. They quickly built a roaring fire in the little cooking stove, and filled the tea kettle with water from a well just a few feet from t ehback door.

"Now, if Mr. Jonesey let anything in the house to cut a boy's hunger, I'll think we're in luck. We'll be snowbound here for a day or two, take my word for it." And Jack began searching the place for food. He found a small bag of sugar, a bag half-full of flour, some tea, bacon and salt.

"We'll not starve," said Charlie, looking over the goody pile o provisions Jack had brought to light. "Can you make bread, Charlie?"

"I can make the finest flapjacks a man ever put butter and syrup on," smiled Charlie. "But—we'll have to have some baking powder for the flapjacks."

"Ha, ha, ha, ha!" And Jack roared with laughter. "Look-ee. Here it is—a can of it! Guess we'll have a sample of those flapjacks, eh? Do you use buttermilk in 'em? Mother does."

"Nixy, only cold water and baking powder, and a pinch of salt. Oh, yes and an egg—beaten to a froth, as the cook-book says. Can you find an accommodating hen anywhere about the house? If so, ask for an egg."

Jack made believe to search for a hen, and crowed like a rooster. But no hen came into sight. "Oh, make the flapjacks without the egg, cook," he said. "We'll forget about the 'beaten-to-a-froth' part of the recipe."

But at that moment a sound—like the human voice—came on the wind. Both boys stopped to listen, and Jack ran to the window and opened it. He thrust out his head, but drew it in again, saying that he guessed it was only imagination on their part. But Charlie declared it could not have been imagination on their part. Bu been imagination, for he heard a woman's voice distinctly. "I'd swear to it," he vowed. "It sounded like some one in distress."

"What would a woman be doing out in such a storm—away off the main road, here close to old Jones' shanty?" asked Jack.

"It's not for us to ask why or wherefore," said Charlie in a decided voice. "Anyway, one might be cutting through the hills here, shortening the road from town. Mother used to come this way in summer. It may be some of our neighbours—cutting off half a mile of main road by coming across Jones' farm."

"Well, let's listen at the door again," said Jack. But Charlie hurriedly got into his topcoat, muffler, and mittens, declaring that he meant to go out and look about.

"Why, boy alive, you'll not be able to stay ten minutes out in this storm! And if you could stay out in i, you'd not find anything, for anyone who had called once would repeat the call. And were som eperson near enough to the house to make us hear his or her voice, that person would come a bit nearer and ask for shelter. Bah, it's foolish to run the risk of going out in this blizzard. You might wander too far from the house, and you know what that would mean—getting lost!"

"I'll risk it," replied Charlie. And he went out into the storm, going over the hill towards the road which came from town. Hardly had he reached a little ravine which ran about a hundred yards from the house when he again heard th ecry. It came plainer, and was "Help!"

"Ah, ha!" And Charlie hurried in the direction of the voice. He was soon rewarded by seeing a dark object, seeming to struggle. On drawing nearer, he found it to be a top-buggy, and a tired old horse trying to drag the vehicle out of a snow-drift into which he had unintentionally pulled it.

Charlie reached the buggy and there found a great surprise. Inside the little covered vehicle sat Gracie Paine—Jack's sister—and her aunt whom she had been visiting in town. Soon Charlie had the old horse out of his difficulty, helping to lift the back wheels while Gracie clucked and urged the animal to work just a little more. As they drew along up the hill in the teeth of the worst blizzard they had ever known. Charlie explained his presence there, and Gracie and her aunt Kit told how they had started out from the town, and had covered more than half the distance when the storm broke upon them.

"And so we decided to cut our long ride half a mile or so by coming over old Jones' place. We intended however, to stop at Jones' house and wait for the storm to break, for we soon saw that he could not make the rest of the way in this snow and wind." So explained Gracie.

While Charlie introduced Mrs. Paine and Gracie in mock fashion to Jack the latter stood with open mouth and eyes. "Surely," he said slowly, looking an dwondering, "I'm having a dream!"

"Nix on that, Jack," laughed Charlie. "It's just the blizzard's surprise party for us. And now we'll have to make a little extra preparation, since we have ladies to dinner. But—while I mix the flapjacks, you take the horse to the stable. Old Jones has his horses with him, and there's plenty of room in the stable for our guests' beast and the buggy."

"All right, mine host," replied Jack with pretended dignity. And he hastened to put the horse up and to give him water and corn, which he found in plenty at the stable.

And that evening and night were spent in a jolly way by the four prisoners of the blizzard, and when, on the following evening, the storm broke enough for them to venture on to the home of Jack and Gracie, they declared they had enjoyed the visit with Mr. Jones during his absence. The boys had given the one bed to Mrs. Paine and Gracie, and they had hung a sheet and blanket across the room to for mtwo apartments, and had stretched themselves on the floor beside the stove, their bed being a buffalo robe an da blanket.

And when "Old Jones" arrived at home two days later he found a cordial letter awaiting him which bore four signatures, and in it he was graciously invited to spend Christmas Day with the Paines, and hear all about his visitors during the blizzard

WE EXTEND A MERRY CHRISTMAS TO EVERY ONE

MR. HARTLEY ENDORSED

While Not Officially Nominated by Temperance League He Will Have the Support of That Body

SECRETARY EXPLAINS

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—A press report of yesterday's nominations states that Mr. J. J. Hartley is the official nominee of the City Temperance League.

While the League has no official candidate in the field, they most heartily approve his nomination.

Believing Mr. Hartley's election would be in the best interests of the moral issues of the city, we urge temperance people to work and vote accordingly.

The above correction is made in justice to the citizens and deputations who have urged Mr. Hartley to accept the nomination, and whose object is the same as ours, in regard to temperance and moral issues.

A. B. Cunningham,
Secretary City Temperance League.

MINERS ARE IMPRISONED

Special to The Examiner.

WIGAN, ENG., DEC. 23. — The Christmas festivities here changed into a day of anxiety when early this morning the Cross Tetley coal pit, which extends for miles underground, was flooded with water and two hundred men working there were caught in the inrushing waters. Rescue gangs are working furiously and eventually all will be brought to the surface. Splendid heroism was shown.

TUPPER'S CONDITION UNCHANGED

Examiner Special:

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 23.—The doctors bulletin shows Sir Charles Tupper's condition this afternoon to be unchanged.

CHRISTMAS IN ENGLAND

Special Wire to The Examiner.

London, Eng., Dec 23.—Christmas will bring little but suffering to many in this great metropolis. It is estimated that 200,000 homeless wanderers will pass to-night and to-morrow night in the cold, cheerless parks, with little shelter and no food. The Salvation Army and other charitable institutions are doing more than ever this year to make it a more happy day for the poor folks, but there is still much to be done.

GOING HOME FOR CHRISTMAS

Special to The Examiner:

Toronto, Dec. 23.—The railroads connecting with the various parts of Ontario reported an unusual exodus of citizens to their homes in the smaller towns and in the country. There are extra trains in all directions, all crammed with parcel-laden Christmas crowds.

HYDRO-ELECTRIC BY-LAW DISCUSSED AT MEETING OF THE BOARD OF TRADE

Considerable Opposition to Measure in Evidence on Ground That Passing of By-law Would Give Council Power to Make Contract.

SPEAKERS WERE MANY

The merits and the demerits of the Hydro-Electric Power By-law, was the chief subject for discussion at the meeting of the Board of Trade, which was held in the Council chamber last night. The President of the Board of Trade, Mr. Vincent Eastwood, occupied the chair.

"The vital question of power goes hand in hand with the procuring of industries for the city, and for that reason we meet here to-night for he purpose of discussing the Hydro-Electric power proposition," announced Mr. Eastwood in opening the meeting. The speaker then issued a general invitation to any who were present, to give an expression of opinion on this most important subject. This by-law was being submitted to the people at the request of the Hydro-Electric Commission, in order to ascertain whether the citizens of Peterborough were in favour of the scheme or not. The wording of the by-law is exactly the same as that which is being presented to other municipalities, and was presented to the people in the form of a referendum. If this by-law was passed it would have to be followed by a money by-law, authorizing the raising of funds to cover the cost of redistribution of the power so generated.

Ex-Ald. Bradburn broke the ice, by explaining the power situation, and its relative position to the retiring council. When the question was first considered a move was made to secure Burleigh Falls, but was finally abandoned owing to the excessive cost. The Otonabee power was then considered, but later was found to have been sold, and the Lakefield dam proposition was also abandoned owing to the high cost. As a last resort the Council took up the matter with the Hon. Adam Beck, with the result that the by-law was now under discussion and will be submitted to the people on January 1st. If the ratepayers vote favourably for the by-law, it will enable us to get estimates as to the cost of production of power. It does not necessarily mean that we shall have to accept the terms of the Hydro Commission. If we cannot get Hydro power as cheap, or cheaper, as we can get it from the other companies, we don't want it.

Mr. W. R. Morris here explained that the prevalent idea among the citizens was, that if they voted favourably on the by-law, it would place the matter entirely in the hands of the Council, who would be able to act without further consulting the people.

Ex-Ald. Bradburn in reply, stated that the passing of the by-law would give the Council the right to enter into an agreement or contract with the Hydro Commission.

Ald. Brown explained that those of the councillors who favoured the by-law would not enter into a contract with the Hydro people, without the consent of the people.

Mayor Morrow said that taking a referendum on the present by-law, was the bettter course to pursue. By doing so, they were merely acting on the advice of the chairman of the Commission.

Mr. Gordon here offered an expression of opinion as regards the legal rights of the Council in dealing with the by-law as they have done. "It would be suicidal on the part of the aldermen elect," he declared, "to break faith on this important issue. Mr. Gordon was in favour of the submitting of the by-law to the people for an expression of opinion.

At this juncture, the oratorical element of the meeting began to get luke-warm, which brought a call for "more wisdom" from the President's chair.

"For years the citizens of Peterborough have been clamouring for more power," declared Dr. Morrison, on rising to speak. It does not matter where the power comes from, whether it be the Peterborough Power, Otonabee Power or Hydro Power, as long as we get cheap power. We should support the by-law, and find out what is in store for us. The money by-law was merely in the form of a referen-

THE SANTA CLAUS SHIP REACHES LIVERPOOL SAFELY

LIVERPOOL, ENG., DEC. 23—After a comparatively calm voyage, the Santa Claus ship Lusitania, bearing several hundred tons of Christmas boxes from Canada and the United States, to folks in the old country, reached Fishguard last night and today great bags of remembrances, letters and Christmas papers from America are being hustled along in fast expresses to be delivered and bring great joy in many bustling cities and quiet hamlets in various parts of the United Kingdom and Europe. The Lusitania also landed a record number of Christmas passengers.

MR. LANGFORD'S OPINION OF THE POWER BY-LAW

To the Editor of The Examiner,—

Sir: The opponents of municipal electric power have tried to raise a bugaboo on the point that a favourable vote on the Hydro-Electric question on January 1st, will give the council authority to enter into a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario next year, or some succeeding year.

I say this is a bugaboo, and for two reasons, either one of which is in itself sufficient.

If a favourable vote is recorded on the question whether the ratepayers wish the city to procure power from the Hydro-Electric Commission, the Commission will proceed with the necessary steps to prepare estimates and submit the terms of a contract. If these are considered of advantage to the city, a bylaw must be submitted to the electors and receive their approval before money can be borrowed by the city for the distribution system and other plant it will require. The vote on January 1st will not give authority to the council to borrow money on debentures or for a term of years; a bylaw for that purpose would have to be submitted later

That of itself is sufficient. But what are these opponents of municipal power afraid of? To whose interest would it be to make an improvident bargain? The Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission has no interest to serve other than the interests of the people. It would not be of any advantage to the Commission or any member of it to have the city make a contract with it that would be disadvantageous to the ratepayers. The Commission and the council have, in this matter, only one interest to serve, that of the ratepayers.

If it were a company that the city proposed to deal with, the matter would be different. The company would desire to make gain by dealing with the city and would endeavour to make a bargain that would give them the largest profit obtainable. Not so with the Commission. They gain nothing; they make no profit for the Commission or any other person. They offer their services to the city with all their power, experience and capable engineers, to enable the city to procure power and equip a distribution system. If they cannot help the city to its advantage, then neither the Commission or any council would have any possible reason for going on.

The personal and corporate interests are all on the other side. It is to their interests to keep the city and the citizens from procuring their own power and light, and while others may be made timorous by bugaboos, they are the ones who get them up to try to frighten the people from taking a step that will aid themselves.

Peterboro should have its own power and light; and the ratepayers should endorse the request to the Hydro-Electric Commission to give its capable and powerful assistance.

Yours truly,
WM. LANGFORD

MISS HATTIE MILBURN INJURED IN AN ACCIDENT

A serious accident occurred on the Chemong Road this afternoon, in which Miss Hattie Milburn, of Smith, was badly injured. It seems that Mr. Isaac Milburn and his two sisters, Miss Hattie and Miss Lizzie were driving into Peterborough and while passing two boys, drawing a Christmas tree, the horse shied, and overturned the vehicle. Miss Hattie was badly shaken up, and her injuries, as far as could be ascertained are serious. The others escaped more luckily. The buggy, however, was a total wreck. Dr. Scott was called and went up to the scene in his motor car.

Mr. Gordon Will Receive Plenty of Support

Municipal matters in general are engaging the attention of the public to a large extent t present. The results of yesterday's nominations were a surprise to a great many. In some orf the wards the nominees are already looming up large, and the result of the voting on January the first is generally expected as a forgone conclusion in regard to these. Outside of the mayoralty contest, the Centre Ward electors are generally favouring Mr. G. N. Gordon, and judging by the general run of conversation heard on the streets and in the stores they are prepared to back him to a man.

Mr. Gordon is a keen, businesslike man, chuck full of indomitable energy, and would prove a valuable acquisition to the new Council.

As a Result However Ralph Costello and Harry Blanchard Appear in Police Court This Morning

CHRISTMAS IN GAOL

An exceedingly interesting and very unusual case came up before Magistrate Dumble in the Police Court this morning, when two men about the age of 30, were charged with undertaking to tell fortunes. Their names were Ralph Costello and Harry Blanchard. They both pleaded not guilty, and after all the evidence was taken, judgment was reserved until the 26th inst.

Newhall Gave Evidence.

Det. S. Newhall was called to state the facts of the case, as experienced by him. He stated as follows:

"Yesterday afternoon about 3 p.m., I kept observation on 249 Simcoe St., accompanied by P. C. Kidd. I saw several people go to the house, where they were passed into a room to Blanchard. Then I went to the house myself and was admitted by Blanchard, whom I told that I wanted to consult him regarding my future. I was taken into the room, where he showed me one of their cards, giving prices for consultation and such like. He drew my attention to a mistake that been made in it, explaining that a special reading for 5 days only would cost 50 cents, while a story of my life from the cradle to the grave would cost me $1.00. 'I suppose you have read one of our cards,' he said, 'we guarantee everything we predict,' I said, "there seems to be only three different things there, drawing his attention to three sections on the card. 'Oh,' he said, 'if we have to tell you everything from beginning to end, and go into close parts of your life, my brother will have to put you in a trance, which will cost you $2.50!' I looked around the room and said that it was not a very good place to go into a trance, and that I would take $1.00 worth. He asked me to write down three important questions of what I wanted to know, and I did, signing Chas. Edwards. When I had finished, he asked me to fold the paper up, after which he held it to my forehead, saying that he wanted to draw the brain into the question. He held it there about three minutes, and I got a slip of paper, upon which was written, "leave town, enemies and danger." I looked at him for a minute and he looked at me, and then he said, 'let me see your hand.' I did so and he said, 'you are going to leave town, and you will meet with great success. You will not be away long, but you will meet with great success.' 'Oh,' he said, 'you have had a broken engagement and a bad disappointment (which is a lie), and by going away, it will be made up. By the way, I see you have had an accident, which put you out of business for a while lately—that is also a lie.' He then said, 'your enemies are not the same sex as yourself, and they were made through disappointment in love affairs.' I said, 'Do you mean from the girl's friends, 'and he said 'yes. That is not true either. There is no danger in your employment, whatever,' he continued, 'you will have a very successful life in the future, if you only carry out your own ideas and not pay attention to what people tell you.'"

"That was worth $1.00 without going any further," put in the Magistrate.

"He then told me that I would live to between the ages of 61 and 65 and then I would die a natural death."

"Did he tell you where you would go, then?" queried the Magistrate.

The witness replied in the negative. That might be very doubtful, he thought. "He told me Costello was his brother," continued the witness. "He said his name was Waltsford. I asked him if his brother would be in, in about 20 minutes, for I was afraid that he might not be around just then. He said yes. I said I had a friend who wanted to have his fortune told. The friend was P. C. Kidd, and I went out and P. C. Kidd went in a few minutes later. Then I went to the door and met Blanchard, and I asked him to step into the inside room. He replied that there was a private consultation going on. I then shoved him in, and we got them both together. I told them that we had a warrant for their arrest. Blanchard did not speak, but Costello got very angry, and after we brought them

CHRISTMAS MARKET

MUCH IN DEMAND

There was a very large market this morning, especially inside. Produce on the outside market was selling slowly in general, except some articles, which were very scarce. Everything presented a Christmas aspect, and the people displayed a true Christmas spirit. The inside market was jammed from ten o'clock this morning until after twelve. At the beginning of the market eggs sold for 40 cents, but at noon they were selling at 35c. to 39c., the latter price being the quotation on the strictly fresh ones. Potatoes were an absent commodity, only a few bags being on sale, and these sold at $2.00, being an advance of 25 cents per bag. There were a few bags sold for $1.75 at the beginning of the market, but the increasing demand and the scanty supply put up the price. Beef was selling at 8c. and 9c., but very slowly. There was a very heavy supply, and a poor demand. Pork was also in great quantities. It sold at from 10c. to 12c. per lb. Turkeys were an outstanding feature on inside market. They sold at from 17c. to 18c. per lb. There was a splendid class of all kinds of fowl, but there was a scarcity of chickens and ducks. The former sold at 30c. and 35c. each, for the large ones, while the smaller ones sold at 40c. and 45c. per pair. Ducks sold at 70c. to 80c., a very high figure considering the quality. The following were the prices:

Turkeys—17c. and 18c. per lb.
Geese—$1.25 to $1.55.
Chickens—35c. and 40c. each.
Butter—30c.
Eggs—35c. to 39c.
Lamb—10c. to 12c.
Beef—8c. to 9c.
Pork—10c. to 12c.
Apples—30c. to 40c. peck.
Potatoes—$1.75 to $2.00.
Farmers' hides—9c.
Butchers hides—10c.
Live hogs—$8.00.
Dressed hogs—$8.00.
Wood—$4.00 per cord.
Baled hay—$15c.
Loose hay—$13.00.

MAY HAVE SNOW YET

Peterborough may yet have sleighing for Christmas. The rain and fog last night certainly did not look seasonable and the hope that the weatherman holds out will not be ungrateful. Here is what he says for to-morrow. "Strong south-west winds, a little colder, with light local snowfalls."

IMPROVING THE MACHINE.

The Hon. A. B. Morine is to be the head of a board appointed to inquire into the civil service of Canada. The powers of the board are unusually large, as it is authorized to appoint sub-commissions wherever that may be necessary. Mr. Morine says that his business will not be to fish out scandals. He will be concerned with the future, rather than with the past, using the experience of the past mainly as a guide to progress and reform.

The Star has frequently had occasion to say that this country has outgrown some of the old methods of legislation and administration. The expansion of Canada during the last fifteen years was so tremendous that the improvement of the machinery could not keep pace with it. When the late Government perceived this, it appointed a civil service commission and placed the inside service under its jurisdiction. It is gratifying to know that this work will be continued. There are many things that might be improved, including the Government reports, which might be made more attractive and instructive to the general reader.—Toronto Star.

CHRISTMAS.

Christmas is a theme as enduring as its Founder. Whether Christmas be white, or green, its spirit comes to the surface all the same. For, after all, Christmas has its full, its real meaning in its spirit alone. That spirit is altogether altruistic—thought and care for others. When Christ came, "as on this day," the selfishness that had ruled the human heart from the beginning, was displaced. Only as we carry this idea out in our human relations, at all times of the year, do we become in any real sense like the Elder Brother, and unless we are like him, we are none of his. Selfish Christianity is as much a paradox as a white blackbird. We must think of others, and, to be honest and sincere, translate our thinking into action. Logically, we must do our gift-giving in the true Christmas spirit. If we make gifts "to be seen of men," to invite competition, and incite hope of return, we miss the mark. We should think of those to whom, in the way of the world, Christmas brings no cheer. We should think of the homes where the children are stockingless, or if not, have stockings that will not hold a Santa Claus gift. We should think of the homes where one "square meal" in the year would be a treat. Who that has a heart to feel and a conscience to be pricked can gorge himself at a Christmas banquet, with no thought of the hundreds—many within a stone's throw—who have not enough to satisfy the pangs of hunger, or, perhaps, nothing at all; who have to bear the piled-up hardships of their lot on this blessed Christmas Day, of cold, hunger, and, possibly, illness, and pain. To some of us there could be no better answer to prayer than the answer that the divine unselfishness should un-Scrooge the Scrooges among us and make us, for one day at least, Christian men and women, with the true spirit of Christmas—Christianity—the ruling motive of our lives and actions. That spirit is thought and deed for others.

MR. HARTLEY FOR MAYOR.

Mr. J. J. Hartley, who was nominated yesterday to contest the mayoralty, brings to his appeal for the support of the electors, excellent promise of making an excellent mayor. He has the qualification of extended and useful experience in both the City Council and in the Board of Education. He has always shown in these capacities the quality of a safe and progressive servant of the public. He has always shown an active interest in the promotion of the welfare of the working man. He has been a considerable employer of labour, and in the pursuit of business has done as much as any one citizen to literally build up Peterborough. His influence and personal efforts have always been enlisted in the interests of moral movements. He is both, by profession and practice a staunch friend of temperance, and can be looked to, if given the opportunity, to see that the traffic, which influences the interests of temperance, shall be held to accountability to the laws under which it exists. Mr. Hartley is, as a life-long citizen, well known, and held in honourable estimation; and, in business ability, singleness of purpose and integrity of character, well qualified to commend the confidence of the people. He is well qualified to command the confirmations to the presidency of the City Council. Mr. Hartley comes into the field in answer to the urgent solicitation of many citizens, who have definite views as to what it is desirable to promote in the interests of the city's best welfare. They have selected a safe and sure exponent of their views. While Mr. Hartley holds his convictions firmly, he is not an extremist, and regards himself as amenable to considerations that should influence the course and policy of a man representing the varied elements of the electorate. If those in sympathy with the platform Mr. Hartley naturally stands for, will give him their united support, his election is reasonably assured. He came into the field at a late hour, and naturally looks to his friends, among the citizens who desire the promotion of the principles his candidature represents, to give their active support to assure his election.

City Council Steers Clear Of The Main Point At Issue

The City Council it at it again. In this issue, elsewhere, is printed another appeal, signed by the aldermen ,trying to show reasons why the people should vote "yea" for the blind by-law on January 1st.

They quote the experience of several towns and cities with Hydro-Electric power.

But they fail to state that the figures of reduction in prices they show apply to towns and cities that, for the most part, had to depend on steam to generate electricity.

Towns and cities not situated as Peterborough is, with power developed at its very doors, and available and already in use by Peterborough at as cheap a rate, and at a far cheaper rate than many of the places quoted.

But the aldermen miss THE MAIN POINT.

They do not try to explain why the people should, by simply voting "yea" on the by-law, put it in the power of the Council of 1912—

To make any contract they choose—

To saddle the city with any liability they choose—

To incur, probably, an addition to the city debt of half a million dollars—

To add, perhaps, $40,000 a year to our tax-roll, and

To do all this without consulting the people, who have to pay the shot.

And without necessity. The aldermen admit that they have not applied to the Seymour Power Company, though everybody knows that they can make reasonable terms for a supply of 3,000 or 4,000 horse power to be taken as we needed, and to be paid for when we use it, and at as cheap a rate and a far cheaper rate, than most of the cities and towns quoted by the aldermen.

And all this without a cent of preliminary expense, without adding to our debt, and by as simple a process as buying a pair of boots from a merchant, who has boots to sell.

We have no objection to getting power through the Hydro-Electric Commission.

But we want this assurance, that we can get it at as low a cost, and lower than we can get it now—any day we need it, any day we ask for it.

The lack of this assurance is the weak point of the by-law, added ot the other weak point that the City Council asks the people to give them a dangerous and unlimited power to spend the people's money without their consent—

To enter into a contract, good or bad, in which the people will not have a say.

Give the people a chance to pronounce on the scheme; give them something tangible to vote for. Give them the assurance that if they pass the by-law, they will have a chance to approve or disapprove of any contract that may be based upon it, and they will vote for it to a man.

But hard-headed ratepayers will not vote to give the City Council a roving commission—

A warrant to make any contract they choose—good or bad—without consulting the people.

The prime object and aim of the Hydro-Electric Commission is to serve the best interests of the people.

Will this be done by depriving the people of the power of saying how their money shall be spent?

The "yes or no" power by-law is all right as far as it goes. But it stops short at the dangerous point, placed in the hands of anybody to the people.

It would be all right and go far enough if it included a distinct provision that any contract for power, based on the by-law, should be submitted to the people, who have to pay.

The by-law, as it stands, asks the people to outrage the first principle of business—which is to know what one is to get and what one is to pay for it.

The by-law, if passed in its present form, gives the Council of next year, or other years, power to make any contract they please, without the consent of the people.

Peterborough wants Hydro-Electric, or other power, on the best terms, but it doesn't want power to play fast and loose with the people's money without the consent of the people, placed in the hands of any Council.

The by-law shuts out completely the people who pay from having a chance to say how much, or little, they are willing to pay.

What is the cause of the action of the Council in submitting a by-law, asking the consent of the people to enter into a contract, and refusing the people a voice in the consequences.

The Hydro-Electic is anxious to make a contract, the Council is anxious for a contract.

Then why don't they plan a contract and submit it to the people. That's the quickest way to settle the matter.

The very thing the people should have a voice in—the spending of the money—is denied them.

The very thing there is no necessity to have—the people's consent to the Council to negotiate a contract—the people are asked to pronounce upon.

Why?

A PRESENTATION

On Friday, Dec. 22nd a number of the friends of S. S. No. 4, Smith, assembled to tender their thanks and appreciation to Miss H. Might, for the services rendered their school for the past two years.

A very pleasant afternoon was enjoyed by all present, and before concluding, the chairman requested Miss Might to come forward, when she was presented with a pair of brass candlesticks by Miss Mary Eastwood, accompanied by an address, read by Miss Mildred Mahood. Miss Might was taken completely by surprise, but found suitable words to thank them for the kind words expressed in the address, and for the beautiful present, assuring them of her deep interest in their welfare.

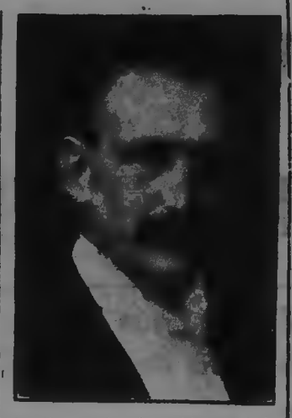
A PAGE OF CHRISTMASTIDE MESSAGES

His Worship Mayor W. G. Morrow



The Christmas season comes to us all with the splendid message of universal brotherhood that makes all men kin in spirit, as they are in the flesh. The obligations that this imposes, accepted and applied in our civic relations, will tend to make us all the better citizens, each with a deep and real interest in the welfare and happiness of all others. With this spirit accepted and made the rule of our life, we shall have universal harmony and a general co-operation in promoting the welfare of Peterborough through the happiness, peace, comfort and grateful feeling that all can help to confer upon all. This same spirit, applied to the material side of citizenship, will tend to build up a community ideal in all that makes for the highest type of citizenship and influence, the co-operation and unity of action that can alone achieve the best results. My last word, as Mayor of Peterborough, to its citizens, is to wish them all a Happy Christmas and a Prosperous New Year, and to urge them to realize the latter by harmonious and united action in the common interest with the motto, one for all and all for one, as their ideal of action, under the guidance of the great spirit that the Christmastide represents.

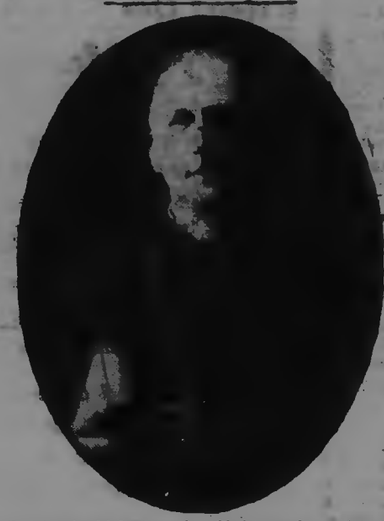
W. G. MORROW.

The Story of the First Christmas

And She brought forth her firstborn son and wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And, to, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. FOR UNTO YOU IS BORN THIS DAY IN THE CITY OF DAVID A SAVIOUR, WHICH IS CHRIST THE LORD. And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, goodwill toward men."

—St. Luke 2, 7-15

His Lordship Bishop O'Connor, St. Peter's



"Glory to God in the highest; and on earth peace to men of good will"—Luke ii.: 14.

The return of the great festival of Christmas once more carries us back to the joyful event of the birth of Christ, Who became man to redeem and save the world. Everywhere and to everyone the spirit of this feast penetrates, and leaves behind it in the heart of man an echo of glad tidings that unto us is born a Saviour who is Christ the Lord.

Christmas does not move us so deeply merely because it is the birthday of a beautiful child, who came into the world in poverty or because it is a festival of good will to men. But it moves us for the greater reason that it means salvation to a race that had fallen, light to souls that groped in darkness, life to hearts that were dead; it means putting us back upon the paths of peace which we had deserted, and restoring to us the vision of God which we had lost.

Rev. J. R. Webb, Murray Street Baptist

"Let us now go even unto Bethlehem and see the thing that is come to pass," said the shepherds to each other). The news of the nativity had come by an instrumentality, and yet they said, "The Lord hath made known to us."

It matters not how we get the impulse that sends us Christward as long as it comes. It is the voice of heaven. The air is vibrant with heavenly voices. There is the hurrying jingle of sleigh bells that tells of stimulated business—the music of serenading bands—the voices of trained choristers—the laughter of merry children. The exultant stops of the great organ of the universe are pulled out—"Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace." We not only hear the music but we feel it in the atmosphere. All hail the Christmastide! But the Christmas message is adequately serviceable only as it leads us to Christ. Let us not be satisfied with what we have heard. Let us enjoy our full privilege. Let us go even unto Bethlehem.

The rush of business is good—the harmonies of our choirs are inspiring—the gathering of the complete family at the Christmas table is a prophecy of heaven, but these must not satisfy. Let us have a personal view of Christ if we would have a really festive day.

Rev. F. J. Sawers, St. Luke's Church

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men." This the angelic song that thrilled the hearts of the shepherds on that first Christmas Day. This also the message for us as we come once more to Christmastide. It is a time of happy home-coming, and joyful family gatherings, a time when discords cease and old feuds are forgotten, a time when kindliness and unselfishness reign supreme. Why? "For unto us is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, Who is Christ, the Lord." Let not the multitude of secular occupations and anxieties shut out the religious significance of Christmastide. The proper balance is preserved in the Angelic chorus, "Glory to God in the highest" first, then "Peace, good will toward men." The honour of God, the kindly remembrance of men, both elements mark the proper observance of Christmas, and, as Tiny Tim observed in the "Christmas Carol," "God bless us, every one."

Mr. R. J. Todd, Christian Science Church

As Christian Scientists, we unite with all Christian denominations in celebrating the anniversary of the birth of our Lord and Master, Jesus, the Christ. During the dark ages of materialism there had been gleams of the infinite good unfolding to those ready to behold it. Mary, the virgin thought, conceived the idea of the Fatherhood of God, and brought forth the child Jesus, God manifest in the flesh; for this we rejoice. Jesus proved by a perfect life, in doing many wonderful works, man's atonement with the Father. Seeing humanity clinging to His personality instead of receiving the divine ideal which He taught and represented, He said, speaking of the human, "I must leave you, but I will send the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of truth, and he will guide you into all truth."

Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, in 1866, perceived this Spirit of truth, the idea of the Fatherhood and Motherhood of God, and named it Christian Science. This ideal Christ has come as aforetime with healing in its wings, healing the sick and sorrowing as well as redeeming the sinner. This makes for Christian Scientists a twofold Christmas; wherever it is received and lived, it makes every day a Christmas day. Paul says, "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin (without the flesh) unto salvation"—Heb. ix.: 28.

Rev. W. C. Riddiford, Park St. Church

Christmas means three things: Peace, Person, Practice.

It means peace to all who will accept the person of Christ, as The Prince of Peace. It means a sweeter, cleaner, personality to all who will let the peace, which passeth all understanding, come into their souls. It means a useful, everyday, practical life to all who sincerely accept the spirit of Christmas as their life-ideal. Peace on earth and good will to men. Not peace in heaven; they have nothing else but peace there. Let us have peace here, peace in the nation, peace in our city, peace in our homes, peace among all men. Peace everywhere. Let us make more of personality and less of property and possessions. There are bigger things than dollars and cents. Christianity got its start in a manger; not in a Gothic Cathedral. Christianity means a Christ-life. The Christmas-life in the personality of Christ incarnated by regeneration in the heart of man. Then we must practice this Christ-life. "Jesus went about doing good." Go and do thou likewise is the command. Christmas time is the time of gifts. When you give, give the best you have. It's not the money value, but the heart value in a gift that counts. Be practical in your gifts. Don't give a cook-book to that hungry family around the corner. Give them food. Don't give a coal-bucket without some coal. Do something practical. The angels only record practical things. What shall the recording angel write for you this Christmas time? Are you at peace with God and man? Is your life fed with Christ in God? Are you practising Christ's principle in your everyday life? If not, why not?

I Wish all my Patrons and Friends A Very Merry Christmas and A Happy and Prosperous New Year.

Rev. G. W. Henderson, Charlotte St. Meth.

This first Christmas Eve glad song of the angels is the sweetest refrain that ever fell on the ears of warring humanity. And the most blessed truths which have been wafted through the centuries since are that first Christmas "Good will to men" and "Glory to God in the highest." To worship God and bless His fellows is man's supreme mission on earth.

"Peace." That is pre-eminently the experience that humanity is seeking for. Peace with God and with men. Peace of heart and conscience. Peace in life, in death, and forever.

Man was not made to war but for peace. For fellowship with his fellowmen and harmony with God. This is the normal condition of earth, this is the very atmosphere of heaven.

Sin is the only element of discord. Sin makes man inhuman. It made "war in heaven," and has filled the earth with violence. It arrays nations against each other, and between individuals it engenders strife. Sin is the one blot on humanity's record. It may all be washed away in the blood of the holy Redeemer.

Oh that on earth there may be peace. Peace everywhere. Peace always. Holy, happy, perpetual and universal peace.

Rev. Canon Davidson, St. John's Church

Our brief Christmas messages are delivered in our churches in an atmosphere which breathes, and amid sacred acts and associations which reflect, the spirit of Christmas as can nothing else.

For it is pre-eminently a Religious Festival commemorating a Divine Supernatural Event, and our grateful joy will find its highest and most directly appropriate expression in the worship of the Saviour of the World.

There are also many other appropriate manifestations of Christmas joy in extending it to the children and the poor among whom their Divine Friend came Himself a child and poor.

There are, too, still wider expressions of the happy all-embracing Christmas spirit, and I take this opportunity to greet my fellow-citizens of every name and to rejoice with them in this glad sunshine of Divine Love in which we are all at this happy season drawn together.

Rev. H. J. Keith, Knox Presbyterian

My Christmas message is one of peace and good will to the people of Peterborough, that all animated by the true significance of Yuletide should yield themselves to its spirit in their citizenship, a spirit of peace among themselves and good will to all others.

A citizenship having in it the tone of joyousness, for there is surely reason for gladness in this city at this time when, with few exceptions, the people are in comfortable circumstances enjoying the fruits of labour in good health, and therefore having good cause to be joyous.

A citizenship that is sympathetic, all citizens together of this fair city in which there is reason to take great pride, all striving to keep free from class separation, living together without bitterness or sectarianism, and while shouldering their common responsibilities in the true spirit of unity, at the same time keeping in sympathetic remembrance the poor, the sick, the sad and the strangers, who cannot enter into their rejoicing with the same zeal they themselves manifest.

A citizenship that aims high, in which no apology is made for the struggle after lofty ideals, in which purity and uprightness are exalted in private and in public life, in which all reveal the spirit of the Christ born anew in us at this Christmas time.

Rev. R. Pogue, St. Paul's Presbyterian

The spirit of Christmas is the spirit of love. Christmas teaches us that blessedness lies not merely in giving, but more especially in the spirit which prompts the giving. It is not the gifts we receive that make us happy this glad Christmas tide, but it is the spirit which leads us to forget ourselves in our thoughts of others. God's love to us was shown in His gift of the Babe of Bethlehem. It is of the nature of love to give. "It is more blessed to give than receive." The most happy man in all the world on Christmas day will be the man who will put most on the world's Christmas tree of faith, hope and love, justice, sympathy and patience, truth, courage and kindness.

For goodness, not only at Christmas, but all the long year through.

The joy that you give to others, is the joy that comes back to you.

AT YULE-TIDE

It's now the

Christmas trees,
mistletoe and holly;
sleigh-bells ringing o'er visit;

and
by all

everything's exquisite;
gifts to make to that's the very reason
I save the ones they give to me; then give them back next season.

SAVE THE HAIR

Newbro's Herpicide Will Do It

No woman should have poor, thin, scraggy hair, and no man need become bald. Poor hair and final baldness are due to the dandruff germ.

Newbro's Herpicide will destroy this little germ and stop the hair from falling. Further evidence of this is found in a letter from Mrs. F. Neilsen, of Tomah, Wis. She says: "I fought the worst kind of dandruff for nine years. I have been using Herpicide now one week, and my scalp is healthy, the dandruff has gone and the itching has stopped. It is the best remedy for scalp diseases I ever saw, and I have seen many.

Don't subject yourself to disappointment and expense by accepting something claimed to be "just as good" as Newbro's Herpicide. These off brands may possibly be good, but why take chances? The genuine and original dandruff germ destroyer can always be obtained If your own druggist has nothing but "just as good" articles, go to McDermid and Jury or E. L. Payne, who will furnish you with Newbro's Herpicide and guarantee one dollar size bottles. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

Novel Favours For Xmas Party

Favours for holiday parties are now taking all manner of practical forms, and this is particularly true in the case of the trifles suitable for young girls. All manner of odd shapes in splint, bamboo, sweet grass and Japanese cherry twigs are to be found in the baskets that are fitted up for ferneries and for holding sewing utensils.

A most attractive little fernery can be made from one of the round, three-inch high baskets of splint, strung with coloured ribbon that terminates at one side in a large bow. Wagon ferneries are made by attaching four cardboard wheels, covered and trimmed with tinsel, to a white and gold box-shaped basket which may be trimmed with ribbon bows or clusters of small flowers, and equally charming holders for ferns consist of the braided splint Old English baskets equipped with a high arched handle that is wound round and round with tricolour ribbons and decorated with several bows and in as many different sizes and shapes.

A GENIUS WHO WORKS.

Robert W. Chambers, the novelist, was called a genius the other day at the Century Club in New York.

But Mr. Chambers, with his wonted charming modesty, denied that he was a genius.

"Unless, indeed," he added, "we accept the definition that genius is 1 per cent inspiration and 99 per cent perspiration."—Washington Star.

Rev. Mr. Fee, Bethany Tabernacle

How great the contrast between the love of God, and man's love, God's ways and our ways. One of the first manifestations of love is the outgoing of the heart in desire to give to the object of that love. This is seen in parent and child, friend and friend. We give to those we love and who reciprocate that love. Human compassion reaches out still further and gives to those who are in want and suffering. Hungry hearts go out to a few, here, or a multitude, there, expressing sympathy, or bestowing gifts, but how narrow the scope; how limited the effort, when we think of the lost and needy of our fellow men.

While we give to those who love us, God gave to those who were His enemies and rebels, and who were helplessly lost in sin. The joys of the Christmas season are because God gave Jesus Christ to save sinners, and now God demands that all who know Jesus as their Saviour, should pass on the message of the blessed Gospel to the lost around us, and to those lying in heathen and pagan darkness. May God give us, at this season, a larger vision of the fields, white already to harvest, the millions who must die without hope, unless we send them the "glad tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people". In our merry-making and giving of gifts, while we "eat the fat and drink the sweet" let us also remember to "send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared," and thus learn that it is indeed "more blessed to give than to receive".

Rev. C. A. Cragg, Mark St. Methodist

"A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year" are the greetings of the season. To help in realizing this we don't know that we can do better than quote the words of Dickens:

"Do not select the merriest of the three hundred and sixty-five days for your doleful recollections, but draw your chair nearer the blazing fire; put a good face on the matter; troll the old-time ditty you used to sing, and thank God it's no worse. Reflect upon your present blessings, of which every man has many, and not upon your past misfortunes, of which all men have some".

Those who follow this wholesome counsel and remember, with gratitude, God's supreme gift to man, will be sure to have a Merry Christmas.

Christ And The Shepherds

"And the shepherds said one to another; Let us go over to Bethlehem."
Luke ii.: 15

Oh, had I been in Galilee,
That night of wondrous mystery,
And heard the angel cohorts sing,
"Hosanna to the Infant King,"
I'd curb my burning wish to see,
My Lord that came to set me free;
Methinks I'd stand beside the way,
Until in light of dawning grey,
The lowly shepherds entered in,
And knelt before the King of men.

For though my Lord was but a Child
In Mary's arms, meek and mild,
If still I found the angels there,
Not all the sights of manger bare
Would give me strength to kneel before
The Holy Babe, on earthen floor,
But when the shepherds entered in,
No more I'd fear the King of sin.

I somehow dread that wondrous star
That led the rulers from afar;
And though they lowly homage paid
To Him Who kings and kingdoms made,
Yet they were there of noble line
That but acclaimed the King divine;
But when the shepherds entered in,
I'd know He loved not kings but men.

Campbellford. D. A. Casey.

Rev. I. Couch, George St. Methodist

On Christmas Eve, 1870, during the Franco-Prussian war, the French were engaged in the defence of Paris. The night was cold and severe. A French soldier sought his officer and said: "Captain, I want you to permit me, for a little while, to leave the trenches". The Captain, having his curiosity aroused, granted him permission, but warned him that he would most probably get killed. They followed him with their eyes, as he proceeded towards the Germans, and expected at every moment to see him fall. Coming within sound of the German sentinels he paused, saluted and began to sing a well-known Christmas hymn: "Noel! Noel! Christ is King of Israel." It was so unexpected and so sweetly done that the hardest hearts were moved. On completing the hymn, he gave another military salute, and walked back to his line. Immediately a soldier had began to walk across the snow from the opposite camp. He saluted and between the companies of armed men, he sang a lovely German version of the "Noel! Noel!" that the French recruit had sung. He sang the hymn through and when he came to the refrain the soldiers in both camps joined in the chorus:

"Noel! Noel! Christ hath ransomed Israel."

Emotion filled all hearts. All diversities and enmities had been forgotten in the presence of The Prince of Peace.

May a similar feeling possess our hearts this Christmastide. "Peace on earth, good will to men". Life is too short to be any other than kind, sweet and loving in thought, word, and deed.—Isaac Couch, George St. Methodist, Church, Christmas, 1911.

HOW TO CARVE THE CHRISTMAS TURKEY

How to carve a turkey is an all-important problem at this time of the year, and next to the puzzle how to get the turkey ranks as the big question of the day. Here are a few new rules that should prove successful in both cases:

There are two methods of settling this question.

First—Steal one.

Second—Sell the piano and buy one.

Having, therefore secured your turkey, you have nothing more to do until it is brought to the table, crisp, brown, aromatic, and piping hot.

You have nothing to do until that time, except to bind up your wife's finger that she cut while trying to dress the bird.

Then you sit down to read your paper.

Just as you are interested in the article about the society woman who was found out, there is a scream from the kitchen and you go in and extract the needle from the palm of your wife's hand. Then you sew up the bird, taking care not to squeeze him too hard, because the stuffing might pop out and stain the kitchen wall varnish.

This done, you go back to your paper.

You lay it down upon command and singe the stuffed turkey by means of a newspaper. This blisters your hand, ruins your coat sleeves, smokes up the kitchen, burns a hole in the linoleum, and also burns out the twine with which the bird was sewed up.

This allows the stuffing to fall out but you hastily restuff the bird and sew him up once more.

After that you really do have leisure to read your paper, except for an hour you have to stand before the hot oven and baste the bird.

Then the company arrives. Uncle and aunt, and wife's mother, and wife's religious sister, and her divinity student lover.

You entertain them in the front room, while wife oversees the maid in the kitchen. You talk a bit of football and politics and horseracing with uncle until wife's pious sister kicks your shins and whispers to you to cut it out because Clarence is a divinity student.

Then you talk kindly about the Methodists to wife's mother and knock the Baptists until the wife hears you and jabs you surreptitiously in the short ribs, whispering to "shut up," because auntie is a strong Baptist.

After that you take uncle up to the den and close the door and hand him the decanter. You also help yourself leaving wife's pious sister, Methodist mother-in-law, Baptist auntie, and Presbyterian divinity student to get into such a religious wrangle that they never speak to each other again.

When dinner is announced, you and your uncle come downstairs, chewing a few cloves, and smiling blandly at everything and everyone.

The Massacre!

Now comes the actual carving of that noble bird—the turkey.

It is not our purpose to tell how the average man cuts up a turkey giving everyone a few shreds and the table cloth and carpet and wall paper the major share.

It is our purpose to instruct you dear reader, in the gentle art of carving a turkey without the aid of blasting powder cross cut saws, profanity or hypnotism.

First, test the knife by running the blade across the ball of the thumb. If blood comes first the knife is sharp.

With a piece of wire picture cord tie the turkey firmly about the neck and the other end of the cord about your waist. This is absolutely necessary, as it does away with the necessity of following the turkey all around the table as you carve.

Now, cut away the meat around the ball-and-socket joint of the turkey's elbow, or wing. Having done this take a Stilson wrench from your hip pocket, and, clamping it on the wing, twist that member off with a few dexterous moves.

Repeat this with the other wing. In removing the legs, when you get to the bone, take an ordinary hand jig-saw and saw through the bone.

With a flourish stab the bird where it has been stitched. Then scrape up the dressing from the adjacent landscape and continue carving until you have the turkey looking like a plate of corned beef hash browned in a pan.

Serving!

Ask each guest which part they prefer.

You do this out of politeness. As a matter of fact, each one prefers a leg and a wing and a slice of the breast.

O course, the divinity student gets the wings, mother-in-law gets the best part of the white meat, uncle gets the legs, and throws auntie and mother-in-law and pious sister and sister and divinity student into a state of shocked coma by remarking that they are certainly a pretty pair, and remind him of a show he saw when he was a boy called the "Black Crook."

Wife gets some of the framework to which is clinging a few shreds of meat.

Then, utterly exhausted, you release the picture wire from around your waist and the neck of the turkey.

You have to do this because you get the neck all for yourself.

After the company has gone you go to the pantry and get some bread and butter to satisfy your hunger. But you are pleased.

Of course, you are pleased.

You have carved the great and glorious national bird, you have covered yourself with glory and gravy, you have spread hospitality and sage dressing all over your beautiful clothes and home.

A Home-made Christmas Tree

Once upon a time the writer was visiting some relatives in the Far West. It was a country where evergreen trees were very, very scarce, in fact, where—at that time—any kind of trees were scarce. The household consisted of parents, grandparents, and five children, a host in themselves, you see. So they very much wished to have a Christmas tree, and enjoy the festive holiday at home.

But where could they get the tree? The father made inquiry in the little five-hundred-inhabitant town, but was told that Christmas trees had to be sent from a city one hundred miles distant, and in order to get one, it should be ordered some three weeks prior to the day on which it was to be used. As this would have involved a good deal of expense (the family was in rather cramped financial circumstances at the time), the gentleman went home with a heavy heart. "No Christmas tree this year, Mother," he said. "We'll have to do with just the dinner and the stockings."

But "Mother" was a woman of resources, as were most of the mothers of that new land, and she put on her thinking cap and "got busy," as we say nowadays. The upshot of her thinking was that she sent her two sons—aged fifteen and seventeen—to the woods for a good-sized sapling cottonwood. Then she made a trip to town herself. When she returned the boys had brought the tree, and it was a fine, straight, full-limbed specimen, too. All the top branches were cut off, and this gave the tree the desired bushy appearance.

Then the mother, the grandmother and the girls went to work. Mother brought out the bundles she had fetched from town. They were unwrapped and there tumbled out several yards of green mosquito netting and dozens of sheets of green tissue paper. The trunk and lower large limbs of the tree were wrapped loosely in the netting, which was tacked in place. The bark helped to hold it securely, too. The paper was then cut into long strips and slashed to form fringe and then wrapped and pasted about the smaller limbs. When the tree was completed, it gave the appearance of an evergreen, cheerful and of holiday aspect.

"That is fine." Such was the exclamation the father made when he was invited into the "front room" (a room reserved for company through the day and occupied as a bedroom at night) to view the Christmas tree in all its glory.

And the writer ventures to say that a merrier and a happier family never gathered about a sure-enough evergreen Christmas tree than the family that gathered about that cottonwood. Green-netting and green-paper draped. Festoons of white popcorn, fancy paper "pretties" adorned the tree, hanging from limb to limb. And the children's stockings, and grandmother's and grandfather's stockings, too, hung from the lower branches where Santa could not possibly miss seeing them.

W.C.T.U. NOTES

OUR WHITE RIBBON.

Only a knot of ribbon—a tiny bow of white,
But it stands for God and heaven, and everything that's right.
It stands for home and country, and all that's good and true,
And they who gladly wear it, the Master's work will do.
It rests on hearts determined, whatever comes or goes,
To purify our nation and fight our deadly foes;
It urges on to victory, knows not the word "defeat";
Entreating those who wear it, their God in prayer to meet;
We prize thee, knot of ribbon, we love thee, bow of white,
That stands for home and country, and everything that's right.

—Clara Clendenan, Winnipeg.

At this Christmas season, as we more fully realize God's unspeakable gift, may we not, as the greatest gift that we can make to the world, give ourselves to be expended for its uplift. The ideal set for Christmas giving is the giving of oneself. Therefore, let us, as Christian women, give ourselves to the work which our white ribbon stands for. The Hon. W. J. Hanna is reported as saying that his department was considering a plan whereby worthless heads of families could be placed at work on the prison farm, paid for their labour, and the proceeds sent to their families. Let us consider the cause of all this. Nine-tenths of this worthlessness is caused by an appetite for ardent spirits, which is catered to so freely by our legalized bar. Just note the distillers, brewers, and retailers, who go automobiling, world-trotting and diamond bedecked out of the proceeds of this wretched business, and yet these unfortunate ones cannot see that they are starving their own families to keep them in luxury. A few figures to show how the liquor press of the United States can misrepresent facts. They claim that the consumption of intoxicating liquors is on the increase, and that the "dry" areas are the cause. A few figures taken from a mass of them will prove the contrary to be true. The population of the United States is estimated at 98,000,000. It is definitely known that in the nine prohibition states there is a population of 15,602,935, who consume approximately 20,000,000 gallons of spirituous liquors yearly, thus making a per capita consumption of 28.53 gallons, or 1.116 of all that is consumed. This leaves for the license, or part license, about 78,000,000 people, who consume the enormous amount of 2,025,427,018 gallons of spirits, or a per capita consumption of 28.53 gallons, or a falling off of 27.25 gallons for every man, woman and child in the prohibition States.

Will you still say prohibition does not prohibit, or that it is not worth while to make the effort to enforce it.? Forever, away with such cant, and to work in earnest for all that our White Ribbon stands for.

Our next meeting will be held in the new Library building.—Member of W. C. T. U., Friday, Dec. 22, 1911.

A Des Moines man had an attack of muscular rheumatism in his shoulder. A friend advised him to go to Hot Springs. That meant an expense of $150.00 or more. He sought for a quicker and cheaper way to cure it and found it in Chamberlain's Liniment. Three days after the first application of this liniment he was well. For sale by all dealers.

Christmas Tree At Park Street Church Was Big Success

The Park street Baptist church Bible school held its annual Christmas tree and concert last night in the parlours of the church. It was, so old timers said, the biggest affair in the history of the church. It wasn't a question of having a crowd, but where to put the crowd. Packed to the doors, a lot had to be turned away. Next year, I guess we had better open up upstairs, said one of the deacons to the reporter, and the reporter said yes, as he tried to get standing room.

The programme was too long to give in full. Suffice to say that it was replete with good things.

The children of the Shelter, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Henry, and that staunch champion of children's rights, Mr. Cochrane, arrived at the church in a conveyance, kindly placed at their disposal by Mr. Gibbs, the livery man. Each child from the Shelter received a present and a bag of candy. The programme was varied by numerous presentations.

Mr. Theobald, the president of the Men's Helping Hand Bible Class, received a beautiful teachers' Bible from the men, which was presented to him by Mr. Archie Jackson, on behalf of the class.

Mr. Moore, the energetic and consecrated superintendent, was the recipient of a beautiful chair, from the teachers and officers of the Bible school, in which he is held in the highest esteem. Mr. Theobald and Mr. Moore replied and thanked the donors for their kindness.

The pastor and his wife were remembered in a handsome manner, Mrs. Riddiford by her Married Ladies' Bible class, and the Rev. W. C. Riddiford by the men of the Helping Hand Bible class and the deacons. Mrs. Riddiford received a handsome fern stand and fern, while the popular pastor of the church was made the happy possessor of a richly engraved silver-tipped gentleman's travelling toilet set. The pastor replied very feelingly to this kind expression of his deacons and men. He said the greatest harmony prevailed, and the peace of the Christmas time was in the church. He was more ready than ever to give his best to the cause of Christ. The following is the address read to the pastor.

Park St. Baptist Church, Peterborough Ontario:

Dear Pastor Riddiford,—We, the members of the Helping Hand Bible Class and the Deacons wish, by this small token to convey to you our sincere appreciation of your kind brotherly spirit and love towards us and your deep interest in our spiritual welfare. We hope that God will so sanctify us, that you will always find a ready response, so far as we are able, in all things pertaining to the cause of Jesus Christ in this portion of His vineyard.

We trust that you will be able to guide us for many years as shepherd of the flock and that God will pour His richest blessings on you and yours.

Signed on behalf of the Class,
JAMES THEOBALD,
President.

Signed on behalf of the Deacons,
R. F. BURTEN,
Chairman of Board.

Mr. Cochrane in closing, thanked the school for their kindness in entertaining the children.

The meeting then closed by singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

OLD-TIME REMEDY DARKENS THE HAIR

Gives Colour, Lustre to Faded and Gray Hair—Dandruff Quickly Removed

From time immemorial, sage and sulphur have been used for the hair and scalp. Almost everyone knows of the value of such a combination for darkening the hair, for curing dandruff and falling hair, and for making the hair grow.

In olden times the only way to get a hair tonic of this sort was to brew it in the home fireplace, a method which was troublesome and not always satisfactory. Nowadays almost every up-to-date druggist can supply his patrons with a ready-to-use product, skillfully compounded in perfectly equipped laboratories. The Wyeth Chemical Company of New York put up an ideal remedy of this sort, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, and authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

If you have dandruff, or if your hair is turning gray or coming out, don't delay, but get a bottle of this remedy to-day and see what a few days' treatment will do for you.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

HYDRO-ELECTRIC BY-LAW

dum, and therefore did not carry much weight.'

Mr. Denham took a pronounced stand against the Hydro power by-law, explaining as his reasons, that he was not satisfied with the wording of the by-law, inasmuch as there was no prescribed limit as to the cost of the power produced. Mr. Beck was approached re the changing of the by-law, but he insisted on having it remain as it was. The by-law is the same as that passed by other cities. It guarantees to produce power at cost. If it costs $30 per horse power the citizens of Peterborough will pay $30 for it. It was like asking the citizens to sign a check, and have Hon. Adam Beck fill it out. Mr. Denham was a firm advocate of cheap power, but did not believe in having the citizens of this city sign a blank by-law. The fact that the chairman of the Commission won't fix a limit creates suspicion. The passing of this by-law would give the next Council authority to sign a contract with the Hydro people, without further consulting the people of Peterborough. You are promised power at cost, without limit as to cost.

Mr. J. B. McWilliams asked the Mayor what it would cost to bring power from Burleigh Falls, a distance of 20 miles. Mayor Morrow replied that it would cost $18.47 per horse power. Mr. Williams was in doubt as to whether it would be cheaper to bring it from No. 8 dam. He also remarked that when he was in the Council, the city was offered the Burleigh Falls property for $3,000, but they refused to accept. He was of the opinion that Peterborough had been very badly treated all through, and believed that Burleigh Falls was the best proposition for the city.

Mr. F. D. Kerr said that the by-law was in effect a power of attorney, not for last year's Council, but for next year's Council and future aldermanic boards. If the present by-law were passed, it would give the Council authority to enter into a binding contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission regardless of the people's wishes, after the by-law was passed. The debt incurred thereby would have to be met by raising debentures. It would give the future Councils unlimited power and leave the matter to their wisdom or lack of wisdom, to enter into a binding contract without further consulting the people.

Mr. Shook—"Does it preclude or bar us from entering into negotiation with other companies?"

Mayor Morrow thought not. The city might enter into an agreement to buy Lakefield power, but the agreement would be null and void unless the people ratified the by-law.

Mr. Kerr—"Does the City Solicitor say that the contract entered with the Hydro-Electric Commission is not binding?"

Mr. Denham—"The Hydro-Commission go into various municipalities, get a bunch of power together, go ahead and develop it, and the people pay the cost.

Ex-Ald. Bradburn thought that the aldermen, headed by a Mayor, would be sufficient to safeguard the interests of the people. They would not be serving the best interests of the public were they to enter into a contract, not knowing what the cost was going to be. "The Hydro-Electric Commission are not going to hold us up, but give us power at cost," he declared.

Mr. Denham remarked that he was not against the power proposition, neither did he assume that the Council would go into the matter blindly. He had no doubt, but what they would go into the matter fairly, but they would be helpless after having signed the contract. "They will not give a price," declared Mr. Denham emphatically. "In Toronto the Hydro people were asking two million dollars more than their original estimate called.

Mr. Langford was perfectly satisfied to leave the matter to the tender mercies of the incoming Council.

Mr. Denham in reply to a statement made by Mr. Langford, emphatically denied that he had any vested interests in any power whatever, neither had he five dollars' worth to sell.

Mr. Langford referred to an occasion when a member of the Board of Trade objected to a power proposition which was before the Board, and at the same time was working up a power scheme for his own interests.

Mayor Morrow explained the situation of the Council as regards the power question, and intimated that the Hydro-Electric was the only alternative.

Mr. R. R. Hall, who was present, very reluctantly responded to a call from the chair, for an expression of opinion. In his opening remarks, he drew the attention of those present to the fact that he had a small interest in the Seymour Power Company. He also agreed with Mr. Kerr's analysis of the situation, and also dealt briefly with the question of favouring a by-law that would give the Council such unlimited authority irrespective of the people's wishes as regards the cost. He did not wish to infer that the Council would not enter into the best contract possible for the city, but the question was, "What will the power cost." Mr. Hall thought that an estimate of the cost of producing the power should be secured first, and then have the by-law submitted to the people.

Mr. Matthew Carton did not think that the chairman of the Commission was trying to get a loop on the people. He gave as a criterion for his remarks the town of Welland, and interspersed them with some interesting figures, which latter proved to be substation irrespective of cost of redistribution and therefore are not quoted.

Mr. Eastwood here intimated that he had been informed that some of the householders of Toronto were dissatisfied with the rates charged by the Hydro-Electric.

Mr. Peck, on being called upon to speak, stated that if he thought the citizens were satisfied with the present conditions he had nothing further to say. He was confident that the Commission would do what was best to serve the best interests of Peterborough, and in giving estimates they always gave the maximum cost. It was rue that if the by-law passed, the council would be endowed with the authority to enter into a contract with the Hydro-Electric, but did not see why they should not be interested with this responsibility.

Mr. B. F. Ackerman was satisfied to adopt Mr. Langford's position and let the Council and the Hydro-Electric Commission act as they saw fit in the event of the ratepayers sanctioning the passing of the measure.

This closed the discussion as far as the Hydro-Electric by-law was concerned.

Mr. Eastwood drew the attention of those present to the fact that the debenture debt of the city had increased during the past six years from $48,700 to $88,000.

By way of explanation, City Treasurer Adams stated that $27,000 of this amount had been expended on the waterworks, including the new dam.

Further Business.

Mr. B. F. Ackerman wrote that the C. N. R. is charging double express rates from Peterborough, thus discriminating in favour of Toronto. The matter will be referred to the Railway Board.

The Board was invited to send delegates to the 13th annual convention of the Canadian Forestry Association, to be held at Ottawa on the 7th and 8th of February.

On motion of Messrs. F. D. Kerr and W. R. Morris, Mr. J. H. Burnham will be asked to represent the Board of Trade at this convention.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Mr. T. Q. Quartermaine, secretary of the Board, collected $10 for the Children's Hospital at Toronto.

DETECTIVE NEWHALL

to the Station, he was very rough and attempted to tear up the papers which we found on him, when we were searching him. We found a plan of their route. It showed that they came from Owen Sound and they had visited the following places: Collingwood, Barrie, Allandale, Orillia, Meaford and Lindsay, and had arrived here on the 18th inst. They kept two sets of books (produced), one set showing an entirely different balance from the other. A letter was found in their possession from friends in Toronto, warning them to be careful, or they would be handed a lemon."

Costello's Evidence.

The defence was then called upon, and Costello gave some evidence. He stated that he had been in the business all his life and used to travel with his mother, who worked with Eva Fay, travelling all through Canada and the U. S., and he stated that this was the first time he had ever been in trouble. He said his readings had always been spiritualistic, palmistry, occultism and mediumism, and they had been considered to be a gift. But this was the first time he had ever been classed as a fortune teller.

"Did you ever realize that you were simply swindling?" asked the Magistrate.

"No," said the defence.

"Well, you can have a nice, comfortable Christmas dinner up on the hill. I will reserve judgment until the 26th inst."

Council Quotes Opinions Of The Places Re Hydro-Electric Power

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—The experience that has been obtained by municipalities procuring electric power through the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, shows that this is a satisfactory way for a municipality to obtain power.

The Managing Engineer of the Toronto Civic System, says in a letter: "In a general way, it may be said that the advent of the Toronto Hydro-Electric system has reduced the price of power in Toronto 30 to 40 p.c. already and has greatly stimulated the use of electricity." The Telegram has estimated the saving amounts to $565,000.00 per annum.

The Secretary-Treasurer of the Woodstock Water and Light System, says: "Regarding your enquiry of the 8th inst., we beg to say that the introduction of Niagara power into our city has reduced the cost of power to users 25 p.c. to 50 p.c. and has also resulted in a slight reduction in the cost of light, which we expect will be further reduced very shortly."

The City Clerk of Hamilton says that the system in Hamilton is in its infancy, but "one effect it had was the reduction of street lighting price when it was first suggested to take Hydro-Electric power. The price of street lighting was reduced from $82.50 to $47.50 per lamp per annum."

The General Superintendent of the London system says: "The effect of the introduction of Hydro-Electric power has been the cutting in two of residence lighting rates from 9c. to 4 1-2c. net, also no meter rent is charged as against 25c. per month previously. The power rates have been reduced to such an extent that a yearly horse power can be purchased on the ten hour basis as low as $21.60 per H. P. As a consequence, while the old company had a minimum of about 2,700 consumers, the City of London has connected in about 9 months' operation, 3,000 consumers, with 4,400 contracts signed. There is no doubt, however, that at the end of the present year 5,000 consumers will be reaping the advantage of municipal ownership as regards cheap power. In consequence of cheap power there is an increased demand and this again cheapens power."

The Secretary of the Preston Light and Water Commission, writes: "The introduction of Hydro-Electric power in our town has cheapened the lighting rates considerably. In many cases the bills of the larger consumers have been cut in two, and bills have been reduced in almost every instance."

The Town Clerk of Galt says: "We took over the street lighting on the 1st of April last, and the private lighting on the first of June. Since the last mentioned date monthly statements have been furnished by the committee having the lighting in charge and which go to show that the average price per killowatt has been seven cents as against twelve cents charged by the private company. From these prices a discount of 10 per cent. is allowed for prompt payment."

The Secretary of the Light and Heat Commission of Stratford writes: "Our Commission have just issued a statement for the eleven months of this year (or to 30th Nov. 1911.) which shows that we have reduced the rates for light and power supplied to our customers by an average of more than 25 per cent. from 1st March, 1911, at which time the new rates came into effect."

The Secretary of the Board of Light and Heat Commissioners of Guelph writes: "The Hydro-Electric Power Commission so far have done more than they promised, and the service since last March has been excellent. The effect it has had on the rates so far as we are concerned is that they were reduced at the beginning of this year 10 p.c., and we expect to make a further reduction at the beginning of next year about 20 p.c.; this is for lighting. The street lighting has been rearranged, and instead of having 100 old, out of date arc lamps, we have at the present time 1000, 80 C.P. Tungsten lamps installed, and everybody seems to be well pleased. The cost to the city will be approximately ten or eleven dollars per lamp per annum, all night and every night service. The power you may judge the satisfaction it is giving, when a year ago we had only about 50 H.P. to-day we have 2000 H.P. in motors installed and over 100 H.P. actual business per hour (10 hour)."

The City Treasurer of Ottawa has furnished reports of the Ottawa Municipal Electric Commission. These show that the operation of the city's plant with power supplied by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission resulted in a reduction at once of 50 per cent. in the price of light, $15.00 per h.p. per year in the price of power, and $20.00 per lamp in street lighting. The net profit in the operation of the plant, after paying interest and sinking fund, which was transferred to capital account, for depreciation and extensions, improvements, etc., amounted in three years, 1908, 1909 and 1910, to $65,153.94.

The Ontario Commission commenced operations with fourteen municipalities as its customers and a demand for 26,000 horse power. Now it has 34 such customers and a sale of 38,000 horse power. On January 1st, twenty-six municipalities will vote on by-laws authorizing their councils to make contracts. The system has been so successful that municipalities are moving in all parts of the Province to take advantage of it.

The ratepayers have nothing to lose and may gain much by voting in favour of obtaining power from the Commission.

Yours truly,
W. G. Morrow, Mayor,

W. Buller,

ANXIOUS TO GET LOCAL TEAM IN BIG LEAGUE

Mr. Jack Jayes, of Peterborough, has received the following self explanatory letter:

Dear Mr. Jayes,—I was talking to your nephew, Walter, and he told me he had an uncle in Peterborough and suggested that I write to you.

As you possibly know, I am in line to manage the Peterborough Baseball Club, should the Canadian League admit Kingston and Peterborough to membership.

I have had plenty of experience as a promoter and organizer, and believe with a little support, that I will be able to land a franchise for Peterborough, in the Canadian League and produce a winning team. I am not acquainted with any one in your town and would appreciate any help from you. Would appreciate it greatly, if you would find out who owns the ball grounds in Peterborough, and send his name to me. I expect to be in Peterborough shortly, after Jan. 1st, and will then see you personally. I would appreciate any effort on your part to help me out. Kindly send me names of prominent business men I might interest in this proposition; also let me know if anything has been done so far towards establishing a professional team in Peterborough.

If everything materializes, I will have Wally playing right field for Peterborough. Sincerely yours,

Hugh A. Shannon,

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE COW AND THE MOON.

"Did your husband leave you much?"
"Pretty near every night".

"When I was twelve years of age I was left an orphan."
"Why, what did you do with it?"

You could go to sleep on this train and wake up in Lindsay."
"No you couldn't. Nobody ever wakes up in Lindsay."

I dreamed last night that I was married."
"And were you happy?"
"Yes, when I woke up".

"Marriage is a good deal like gathering mushrooms. You are always afraid that you are going to pick a toadstool."

These are a few of the good things in the line of bright dialogue that is handed out in Chas. A. Sellon's production of "The Cow and the Moon," which delighted a large audience at the Grand last night, and which will be repeated to-night. "The Cow and the Moon" is a musical extravaganza—a companion to the "Cat and the Fiddle," being similar in action and characters to that production, which has made such a hit on its several appearances in Peterborough. When it is said that last night's offering is even better than "The Cat and the Fiddle" you will know just how good it is.

Mr. Sellon seems to have the happy knack of turning out productions that meet the popular taste—"The Cow and the Moon" has the "punch" to it, and there is not a dull moment from start to finish. Like the "Cat and the Fiddle" it is full of scenic surprises and the settings are magnificent. No better illusion has been seen here in some time than the effect of an approaching locomotive as given in the second act. The costumes are rich and the electrical effects above the ordinary.

There is a pretty, vivacious, and well-trained chorus, who sing and dance nicely, and add to the general gayety. The music is tuneful, if a trifle reminiscent. There is one melody of the haunting kind, that stands out from the rest of the score like "The Maid in the Moon" does in the "Cat and the Fiddle," and that is the song "Just the Same old Story," which everyone whistled or hummed on the way home.

The cast is an adequate one, headed by two very clever people in Ed. Gilmour and little Janet Priest. Mr. Gilmour as "Happy" proved a very clever comedian, with a method all his own, and he got his stuff over the footlights in great style. In addition, he sang with much more ability than one usually expects or gets from a comedian. Little Miss Priest is a charming soubrette, who won the audience quickly and had them with her all the way. The other members of the cast are worthy foils to their leaders. The whole production was produced with a vim and dash that was refreshing.

By all means, get your shopping done early enough to-night to give yourself a Christmas box by attending "The Cow and the Moon".

Christmas Rush In Peterboro'

Busy Scenes on the Streets This Morning

"Merry Christmas, Jack," "How do you do, Mrs. Jones ,the compliments of the season to you," Hullo, Charlie! How's the farm?" On traversing the main streets of Peterborough this morning, such remarks, and others, could be heard at every step. It was not until the day had advanced towards noon that the Christmas crowds accumulated; neither was the morning what might have been called a model one, as, in its early stages, rain fell slightly. However, it was Christmas, and the element of the season prevailed. "What a pity it is we have no sleighing." This remark could be frequently heard, and an Examiner reporter was told by a farmer that the "green Christmas" will possibly account in some measure for high prices in farm produce. The express companies and the express delivery wagons were all heavily loaded o-day, while very few pedestrians were without parcels of some description. Beads of perspiration stood ou on the brows of the clerks in some of the stores, where purchasers flocked in and out in a continual whirl, while the letter carriers had, in many instances, almost more than they could carry. There was a great demand for turkeys and geese and those who exhibited them on the market had little trouble in disposing of them. The familiar faces of many Peterborough people, who had returned home for a Christmas vacation could be seen in the city, and the passenger trains were forced to be augmented by extra cars in order to cope with the large number of passengers, and in some cases arrived late in consequence thereof.

CONDUCTOR BADLY INJURED

Slipped Under Train at Myrtle—Leg Amputated

Conductor Robert Kelsey of Toronto, on the second section of the early morning (C.P.R.) express from Montreal, which passed through Peterborough at 7.17, slipped under his train, at Myrtle, and had his right leg taken off below the knee, as well as being badly bruised about the head and body.

Mr. Kelsey, who is a married man, was taken aboard the train, which was rushed at full speed to Toronto, where he was conveyed to the General Hospital. The circumstances are particularly unfortunate, as Conductor Kelsey was running the special train, and not his regular trip. He is well and popularly known to the C. P. R. employees of this vicinity, who will regret his misfortune. Full particulars are not to hand.

BODY FOUND AT PONTYPOOL

PONTYPOOL, ONT., DEC. 20.—The body of a man was found lying beside the track of the C. P. R., just east of Pontypool station. Sectionmen found the body cut in two. They gathered it together and took it to the baggage-room of the station, waiting the coroner and identification. It is supposed he had been riding the trucks of a freight train, and, becoming cold and exhausted, fell off and was run over.

However, they have until 9 o'clock to-night to make the qualification, and there is expected to be a contest in every ward but the East.

CRUIKSHANKS.—On Dec. 17th, to Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Cruikshanks, 178 Sophia street, a son.

FOR THE GRIP

"This is the season," said the man withe the valise, "when that dread disease, the grip, reaches forth its loathsome tentacles, and gathers in the good, the virtuous, the beautiful. There is a reaper whose name is death ,my dear' madam——"

"I'm not your dear madam," interrupted Mrs. Curfew with indignation, "and I'll thank you not to be too familiar on short acquaintance, which is a weakness of agents of all ages and sexes. I don't allow anybody but members of my own family to call me madam, and as for your reaper or whatever it is you wish to sell, I have nothing to reap, and if I had I'd use a sickle or a lawn mower. Which reminds me that a couple of weeks ago an agent sold me a pair of shears, guaranteed pure steel, and I tried to cut my husband's hair with them, and his language was a sight to be seen, for they wouldn't cut, and he asked me to finish the job with the pincers."

"I'm not selling shears or any other edged tools," said the agent. "I have always argued that people should go to the hardware store for such weapons, thus encouraging home industries. I have a higher and nobler mission. I am here to alleviate human suffering and save lives. At this season, as I was saying, that dread disease ,the grip, numbers its victims by the score. And yet, madam, there is no reason why this should be so, for that greatest of all modern savants, Dr. Bittenbender, has compounded his syrup of prunes especially to combat the ravages of that disease. This wonderful syrup ——"

"I don't want any of your wonderful syrup and I wish you'd go along with you, for I'm fixing the ingredients of a johnnycake for supper, which cake has no barks or buds in it and is not recommended by any archbishops, but my husband is very fond of it, and if supper is not on time there will be great doings in this house, and the blame will rest upon you.

"I have no doubt that you are the same agent that called upon Mr. Sparks a week ago and sold him a bottle of medicine for the grip, the particulars of said transaction having been reported to me by my youngest daughter, who boards with Mr. Sparks, and she says that the sufferings of that poor man, as a result of trafficking with agents, would rend a heart of stone. Mrs. Sparks and her daughters keep close watch on him to restrain him from buying anything off agents, but once in a while he escapes their vigilance and gives way to his besetting sin. So a week ago, when the women weren't looking, he bought a bottle of grip medicine from an agent, said medicine, of course, being compounded by the greatest savant in the world. He took two or three doses and it went to his head and unsettled his reason, and my daughter says the conduct of that unfortunate man while under the influence of the medicine was shocking in the extreme.

"For a time he seemed to think that he was a circus actor and persisted in walking the clothes line in the back yard, balancing himself with a long pole, and then he led a horse out of the barn and tried to do a bare-back stunt. Poor Mrs. Sparks and her daughters had an awful time persuading him to go into the attic where they locked him in and supposed he would be safe until he recovered from the effects of the barks, leaves and healing herbs in that medicine.

"But the afflicted man seemed completely unbalanced mentally, and what did he do but cut a hole in the roof and then climb through and take a seat on the chimney. If you can imagine anything more distressing than the sight of a venerable man seated on his chimney I should like to know what it is. Mrs. Sparks had occasion to start a fire in the fireplace about that time and found that the flue wouldn't draw, so she remembered having heard that if a gun was fired up a chimney it would dislodge the soot. So she fired the family shotgun up the chimney and the result may better be imagined than described, the surgeons having picked 876 birdshot from Mr. Sparks' person.

"So you must realize how absurd it is to try to sell me any of your reaping machines, no matter who endorses them."

Up in the Nineteenth Assembly District they are telling this story of a fallen political idol. In the rounds of his social activities he attended an afternoon entertainment given by the outdoor playground association. Among the vocal selections rendered by the children was "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." At the conclusion of that hymn the political idol was called upon for a few remarks. He addressed the audience with emotion.

"Children," he said, "it does my heart good to hear you. Scarcely ever have I heard 'The Star Spangled Banner' so beautifully sung."—New York Times.

W. H. BRADBURN FOR MAYOR

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY OF PETERBORO'

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—Having been nominated for the office of Mayor of the City of Peterborough, I solicit your votes and your influence to elect me to that position.

As an owner of property and a heavy tax payer, I am deeply interested in the welfare of the city, and if elected will endeavour to keep the expenditure down to the lowest point consistent with good service.

I will advocate a policy of progress. We have a good city and its advancement should continue. I will give of my own time to assist in securing manufacturing industries.

For this purpose and to secure light and power for the citizens at the lowest cost, I believe we should, if practicable, have electric energy, owned and controlled by the city, and should accept the assistance of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to procure it.

The inconvenience caused by there not being a bridge over the river south of Hunter street is so considerable, that one should be placed at a point at or near Sherbrooke and Maria streets; and by having a new bridge built at Hunter street by the city, the Government and the Street Railway, and the present Hunter street bridge moved further south to Sherbrooke street, a saving can be made and the extension of the street railway to the East Ward secured. It should be accomplished in that way.

In street work, steps should be taken to improve our streets along permanent lines, as the traffic on some of them is so heavy that the maintenance of ordinary roadways on them is expensive.

The appointment of a permanent assessor should receive consideration, as with an assessor giving his whole time to the work, a more equitable assessment should be secured.

Anything that will advance the interests of the city and the ratepayers, will receive my best attention, and having been in the Council during the past five years, and in touch with the municipal business, I believe, I can give you good as well as faithful service.

As it will be impossible for me to meet all the electors before election day, I take this opportunity of soliciting your votes and influence for Mayor for 1912.

I am, Ladies and Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
W. H. BRADBURN

Card From Ex-Alderman Gillespie

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough.

Ladies and Gentlemen—

Having been again urged by a large number of ratepayers interested in the welfare of the city, I have consented to accept the nomination for Alderman for 1912.

My previous record in the Council is known to you all. If again honoured with your confidence I will endeavour to render such efficient service as will conduce to the best interests of the city irrespective of wards or boundaries.

As my business engagements will not permit me to personally interview the Electors, I take this means of soliciting your votes and influence.

Yours respectfully,
Geo. A. Gillespie
Dec. 24, 1911.

TO THE ELECTORS OF NO. 5 WARD

It is my duty to return my most sincere thanks to the Electors of No. 5 Ward who have shown their confidence in me by allowing me to be returned as Alderman by acclamation. It is an unusual honour and one which I appreciate highly. As in my past year's experience on the Council Board, I will, in the future, use every effort to further the best interests of the City as a whole and promote, in every way possible, the welfare and happiness of our Citizens.

Thanking you again and wishing you all A Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year.

Yours,
J. C. Anderson

DEATH CLAIMS PASTOR

Brother of Mr. John Cameron of Peterboro Dies While Occupying His Pulpit

A recent issue of the Hawick Advertiser of Hawick, Scotland, contains an account of the very sudden death of Rev. Alexander Cameron, brother of Mr. John Cameron, of the local Customs house staff. The Hawick Advertiser says:

On Sunday, at the evening service, in Robertson United Free Church, the death occurred with startling suddenness of the Rev. Alex. Cameron, M.A., the esteemed minister of the church. In the forenoon, Mr. Cameron exchanged pulpits with the parish minister, Rev. Mr. McInnes, and gave no indication as the day advanced of inability to take the evening service in his own church. The congregation sang the well known hymn, "Nearer my God to Thee," and afterwards, when the minister was about to proceed with his discourse, he was observed to falter and stumble, and in a moment all was over. Grief-stricken, the worshippers realised that their pastor had died at his post.

Rev. Mr. Cameron, who was sixty-six years of age, was born at Plusgarden, near Elgin. He was educated at Elgin Academy, and at King's College, Aberdeen. He took his divinity course at Aberdeen and Glasgow. He was minister at Greenlaw, where he acted as colleague and afterwards successor to the late Rev. Mr. Fairbairn. An unfortunate breakdown in Mr. Cameron's health threatened to end his ministerial career, but after a season of travel, he accepted the pastorate of the Roberton congregation, to which he came fully six years ago. Rev. Mr. Cameron was unmarried and is survived by three brothers: Professor Cameron, of the U.F. College, Aberdeen; Rev. Richard Cameron, Abbey U.F. Church, Jedburgh; and Mr. John Cameron, of Peterborough, Canada.

VICTORY CONCEDED

Rebels Will Get Republic Think European Powers

JAPAN NOW REALIZES IT

Tokio, Dec. 26.—A conference of members of the Japanese Cabinet at which many of the elder statesmen, including Prince Katsura, the ex-Premier, were invited to assist, was held here Sunday. The strictest secrecy has been maintained regarding the discussions at the conference, but it is generally believed that the latest developments of the situation in China were taken into serious consideration. It is understood that the conference reached the conclusion that the adoption of a republican form of government by China was apparently inevitable.

Information from a reliable source has reached here that the revolutionaries in China continue to insist firmly on a republic, and that the peace negotiations now proceeding at Shanghai will result in a rupture unless the imperial authorities in Pekin should yield to their demands in this respect.

Most of the powers are apparently reconciled to the inevitable tendency of the prevailing situation. Neither Japan nor Great Britain has any intention whatever of intervening in any way in China, much less of imposing any form of government on that country.

The general feeling here is that the only alternative for the present situation is for the representatives of the Imperial Government in Pekin to yield.

Major-Gen. Shiba, who was in command of the Japanese troops in Pekin at the time of the Boxer uprising in 1900 left Shimonoseki, the fortified naval city in the southwest of Hondo, Japan, for Tokio, in response to an official summons received by him from headquarters.

Rebel Leaders Confer.

Shanghai, Dec. 26.—Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the leading promoters of the revolution, who may be named as president of the proposed republic, boarded a launch soon after his arrival here yesterday morning and was escorted down the river by two warships. After landing he proceeded by automobile to the residence of Wu Ting Fang, the foreign secretary in the revolutionary provisional Cabinet, to discuss the situation.

So far as is known, no reply has yet been received from Yuan Shi Kai, the Imperial Premier, with regard to the establishment of a republic, as insisted upon by the revolutionaries.

May Oust Premier.

London, Dec. 26.—A special despatch from Shanghai says that the revolutionaries are incensed at the imperialists for the capture of Taiyuanfu, in Shansi Province, and have protested to Tang Shao Yi, the representative of Yuan Shi Kai, at the peace conference, against the continued breaches of the armistice. They have demanded an indemnity, the withdrawal of the troops and the punishment of the officers upon whom the responsibility rests.

The revolutionary leaders insist that unless Yuan Shi Kai replies at once to the demands of the conference they will elect Dr. Sun Yat Sen president along with the Cabinet which has already been formed.

Tang Shao Yi explained that the imperialists had occupied Taiyuanful only after the revolutionists had deserted the town. He forwarded the demands, however, to Pekin.

Rebel Leaders Confident.

Shanghai, Dec. 26.—Dr. Sun Yat Sen is quartered in a large modern residence in the French concession. He said yesterday that he preferred to make no statement until he had reviewed the entire situation. His conference with Wu Ting Fang and other leaders shows that he is evidently commanding the greatest respect and attention.

Dr. Sun said that the entire movement was united, and there would be no serious differences. It is quite evident that the revolutionaries are preparing for the constructive work of government, and are not counting on Yuan Shi Kai. They are even disregarding Pekin, which they confidently assert they can take at leisure.

It has been definitely decided that Nanking shall be the future capital. Even after the abdication of the Emperor and the reorganization of the new Government, the leaders assert positively, Pekin will not be considered.

In the minds of the revolutionists the movement has been highly successful. One of the high officers said yesterday: "Fourteen provinces have declared for a republic. We control 12 divisions of the army; two more are coming. We hold the entire navy. Two provinces remain imperial and two are neutral. There is no government in Pekin. Yuan Shi Kai is its only representative, except the infant Emperor.

"The sooner the powers recognize the real situation, instead of clinging to harmful and intangible sentiment, the sooner will order be secured in China. Hesitation to recognize the republican cause will certainly prolong the stagnation of trade and will be responsible for much bloodshed, should fighting begin again."

Red Cross Founder Honored.

Means "Absolutism."

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 26.—"If Roosevelt is put in the White House in 1912, we will never get him out again except feet first," was the statement of Col. Henry Watterson, editor of The Louisville Courier Journal, in commenting on the Republican situation throughout the conutry.

Col. Watterson expressed the belief that the long looked-for change of parties was at hand, but he has not declared his choice for the Democratic nomination.

Col. Watterson declared that in his opinion the Republicans could not elect either Roosevelt or Taft, and said the election of the former president, abrogating the third term tradition, would be a step toward absolutism.

Lindsay's Municipal Fight.

Lindsay, Dec. 26.—The following candidates are in the municipal field: For mayor, Dr. J. W. Wood, R. M. Beal; for reeve, James Graham, A. C. Babcock; for first deputy reeve, M. J. Levis and James H. Hopkins; for second deputy reeve, H. Dobson and W. W. Jordan; for council, W. McWatters, J. A. Brown, F. McClory, N. Small, Alex. Horn, N. Grey, J. Wilson, S. Howe.

Sardinian's Rough Trip.

St. John, N.B., Dec. 26.—The Allan liner Sardinian reached port yesterday with 168 passengers. Capt. Hamilton said he encountered a continuous series of gales, and added that he had never seen the Atlantic so rough as it has been so far this week.

WANTONLY KILLED

Five Hundred Persians Are Massacred Near Resht

SLAYING STILL GOES ON

London, Dec. 26.—A massacre has been going on in Resht since Saturday, according to official Persian telegrams received in London yesterday. These state that on Sunday 500 Persians were killed by the Russians, many of them being women and children. The people, it is said, have been exhorted not to fight, and not to give the slightest provocation, but the massacre still continues.

Resht is the capital of the Province of Ghilan, and has 40,000 inhabitants. The Government house has been bombarded, and many Government officials and police have been killed. Private houses have been demolished.

According to other despatches the Russians killed four unarmed Mohammedans in the Armenian quarter of Tabriz, during the fighting in that city.

"The people of Persia," says the despatch, "are stupefied at the attitude of the Russians, especially as these outrages have followed immediately on the acceptance by Persian of the second Russian ultimatum, and when Persia has shown every desire and disposition to conciliate Russia and establish friendly relations."

Resented Shuster's Dismissal.

Teheran, Dec. 26.—The Cabinet yesterday notified W. Morgan Shuster, treasurer-general of Persia, of his dismissal from that office. This follows the decision of the National Council and the Ministry to submit to the demands contained in the Russian ultimatum. The Cabinet intimated to Mr. Shuster that they would communicate to him later their plans concerning the turning over of his portfolio to his successor.

An indignation meeting was held after the announcement of Mr. Shuster's dismissal was made, to protest against the so-called coup d'etat, but the crowds were dispersed by the police without disorder. Further demonstrations are expected. All the opposition newspapers have been suppressed, and martial law has been proclaimed.

The Russian consul, who has assumed the government of Resht, reports the town quiet at the present time but looks for further outbreaks.

It is reported from Shiraz, capital of the province of Fars, that Persians fired on a body of Indian troops who were proceeding to meet the British consul, one of the Indian soldiers being killed. There has been considerable trouble at Shiraz, on account of the boycott instituted against the Indian troops by the Mollahs.

Russians Abandon Bank.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 26.—Advices received here yesterday from Tabris, in Persia, say that the Russian troops have been forced to abandon the Russo-Persian Bank, which is situated in the principal bazaar, and which they have hitherto been protecting. There is a sum of about $150,000 in specie lying in the bank, which is now entirely without a guard.

Fighting Not Over.

Julfa, Persia, Dec 26.—According to information received here fighting continues in the streets of Tabriz between the Russian guard and the Persian constitutionalists. The Russian reinforcements, consisting of a regiment of rifles and a sotnia of Cossacks with a mountain battery, which left here on Dec. 23 for that city, arrived there yesterday, having encountered very little opposition from the Persians.

Steamer Ashore; Many Lives Lost.

Bordeaux, France, Dec. 26.—The Uruguayan steamer Rafael, from Montevideo, has been wrecked off Coubre Point, on the west coast of France, at the mouth of the Gironde. The Rafael carried a crew of twenty-five men. Five bodies have already been washed ashore.

The coast continues in the grip of the storm, which has lasted for several days. A score of sailing vessels have been driven on the rocks, the crews being rescued with difficulty. All incoming vessels report damage; several of them have had men swept overboard by the heavy seas.

TWO DIE IN WRECK

CROWDED WITH PASSENGERS

Toronto, Dec. 26.—Two persons were killed and many injured in a street car wreck here on Christmas eve. A loaded King street car, westbound, dashed past the barns and striking a switch ran sharply around a curve where it turned over, crushing many in the wreckage.

The list of casualties is as follows:

Dead.

Mrs. Jessie Deacon, 13 Elmer avenue; killed almost instantly. Chest terribly crushed.

Mrs. Williams, 7 Fenwick avenue; base of skull fractured. Died at 8.30 p.m. in General Hospital.

Wounded.

Arthur Blow, 76 Victor avenue; severe scalp injury.

William Cassan, 321 King street west; shoulder bone broken.

Mrs. Brayne, Alexandra Industrial School for Girls.

Mrs. Patterson, Alexandra Industrial School for Girls; severe shock.

Mrs. Wetherly; arms and shoulders badly hurt.

Mrs. McMillan; fractured shoulders.

Several others were taken home after having their wounds dressed.

With the exception of Robert Hall and Arthur Blow, who both have fractures at the base of the skull, all are doing very well, and have good chances of recovery. These two are in a very grave condition, and are not expected to live.

The car was several minutes late and was crowded, even men, women and children were standing on the back platform. The motorman turned on all the power after he passed the switch at the new Don bridge and let his car go at full speed past the car barns, where he should have stopped. After his arrest he said that he tried to stop, but that the brakes were out of order, and he lost control of the car just after leaving the bridge.

Mrs. Jessie Deacon, 25 Elmer avenue, who died a few minutes after the accident happened, was thrown through a window near the front of the car and crushed beneath the heavy framework. The others in the body of the car were thrown into a mass, and those on the rear platform were scattered in the mud, some twenty feet from the car. Mrs. Hillis Williams of 7 Fenwick avenue, died of a fractured skull an hour after being taken to the General Hospital.

It is estimated by street railway officials that the car was traveling at nearly fifty miles an hour.

Ten or twelve people were standing in front of the car barns, which are situated in the block running east from St. Lawrence street, and they bore out the statement that the car was traveling at an excessive rate of speed.

It was the worst street car accident Toronto has known since Thanksgiving Day in 1904, when a car with about thirty people broke through the railway gates at Queen East and De Grassi street level crossing and was struck by a train. Four people were killed and many others injured.

With the memory of Sunday night's tragedy still fresh in their minds, thirty-five passengers in King street car No. 1,808, westbound at the King street barns, close to the scene of the accident, were given a severe fright at 10.45 last night when that car, to allow the car behind to run ahead, switched into the sheds, and in so doing bumped the side of the brick entry, partially demolishing the rear vestibule and severely shaking the car and its occupants. There was a scene of confusion and it was a fortunate thing that a panic did not develop.

Farmer's Heavy Loss.

Brockville, Dec. 26.—John N. Truesdell, a farmer, residing near Rockfield, in Escott Township, sustained a serious loss when his barns and contents were destroyed by fire. When the fire was discovered it had made rapid headway and nothing could be done to save the buildings. Some pieces of machinery were got out, but the buildings were consumed, together with their contents and 21 head of cattle, 13 sheep and the entire season's crop. Mr. Truesdell carried some insurance, but his direct loss is about $2,500.

Burned by Christmas Tree.

Lynn, Mass., Dec. 26.—Playing Santa Claus in flannel attire and tousled hempen hair, George H. Sawyer, aged 14, went too close to the lighted candles on the Christmas tree in his home in Cliftondale yesterday, and suffered burns which are expected to prove fatal. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Seward Sawyer, were burned severely in an attempt to beat out the flames and save the life of their boy.

Chicken Thieves Fired Barn.

St. John, N.B., Dec. 26.—Thieves who broke into Samuel Lavigne's barn Sunday night and stole several chickens and geese, set the place on fire and the building was totally destroyed. One horse and some poultry were burned. The place is in a dangerous fire zone, and for a time the wind was blowing a gale, the blaze looked serious.

J. W. BROWETT

Optometrist

Q. Why is it that glasses are worn so much more now than years ago?

A. Years ago the science of optics or correcting errors of sight was not understood as it is to-day; only old persons or those near-sighted wore glasses. Now we correct with lenses all errors of sight.

Q. Why is it that cheap glasses do not give satisfaction?

A. Cheap glasses are so faulty in construction and are of such poor quality that they distort the vision and cause pain in the eyes. The optical glass used by us is brilliant, clear and perfect, insuring comfort and ease to the wearer.

Q. Can my headaches be relieved with glasses?

A. A personal visit will be necessary. Let us talk it over.

VICTORY CONCEDED

Rebels Will Get Republic Think European Powers

JAPAN NOW REALIZES IT

Tokio, Dec. 26.—A conference of members of the Japanese Cabinet at which many of the older statesmen, including Prince Katsura, the ex-Premier, were invited to assist, was held here Sunday. The strictest secrecy has been maintained regarding the discussions at the conference, but it is generally believed that the latest developments of the situation in China were taken into serious consideration. It is understood that the conference reached the conclusion that the adoption of a republican form of government by China was apparently inevitable.

Information from a reliable source has reached here that the revolutionaries in China continue to insist firmly on a republic, and that the peace negotiations now proceeding at Shanghai will result in a rupture unless the imperial authorities in Pekin should yield to their demands in this respect.

Most of the powers are apparently reconciled to the inevitable tendency of the prevailing situation. Neither Japan nor Great Britain has any intention whatever of intervening in any way in China, much less of imposing any form of government on that country.

The general feeling here is that the only alternative for the present situation is for the representatives of the Imperial Government in Pekin to yield.

Major-Gen. Shiba, who was in command of the Japanese troops in Pekin at the time of the Boxer uprising in 1900 left Shimonoseki, the fortified naval city in the southwest of Hondo, Japan, for Tokio, in response to an official summons received by him from headquarters.

Rebel Leaders Confer.

Shanghai, Dec. 26.—Dr. Sun Yat Sen, one of the leading promoters of the revolution, who may be named as president of the proposed republic, boarded a launch soon after his arrival here yesterday morning and was escorted down the river by two warships. After landing he proceeded by automobile to the residence of Wu Ting Fang, the foreign secretary in the revolutionary provisional Cabinet, to discuss the situation.

So far as is known, no reply has yet been received from Yuan Shi Kai, the Imperial Premier, with regard to the establishment of a republic, as insisted upon by the revolutionaries.

May Oust Premier.

London, Dec. 26.—A special despatch from Shanghai says that the revolutionaries are incensed at the imperialists for the capture of Taiyuanfu, in Shansi Province, and have protested to Tang Shao Yi, the representative of Yuan Shi Kai, at the peace conference, against the continued breaches of the armistice. They have demanded an indemnity, the withdrawal of the troops and the punishment of the officers upon whom the responsibility rests.

The revolutionary leaders insist that unless Yuan Shi Kai replies at once to the demands of the conference they will elect Dr. Sun Yat Sen president along with the Cabinet which has already been formed.

Tang Shao Yi explained that the imperialists had occupied Taiyuanfu only after the revolutionists had deserted the town. He forwarded the demands, however, to Pekin.

Rebel Leaders Confident.

Shanghai, Dec. 26.—Dr. Sun Yat Sen is quartered in a large modern residence in the French concession. He said yesterday that he preferred to make no statement until he had reviewed the entire situation. His conference with Wu Ting Fang and other leaders shows that he is evidently commanding the greatest respect and attention.

Dr. Sun said that the entire movement was united, and there would be no serious differences. It is quite evident that the revolutionaries are preparing for the constructive work of government, and are not counting on Yuan Shi Kai. They are even discarding Pekin, which they confidently assert they can take at leisure.

It has been definitely decided that Nanking shall be the future capital. Even after the abdication of the Emperor and the reorganization of the new Government, the leaders assert positively, Pekin will not be considered.

In the minds of the revolutionists the movement has been highly successful. One of the high officers said yesterday: "Fourteen provinces have declared for a republic. We control 12 divisions of the army; two more are coming. We hold the entire navy. Two provinces remain imperial and two are neutral. There is no government in Pekin. Yuan Shi Kai is its only representative, except the infant Emperor.

"The sooner the powers recognize the real situation, instead of clinging to harmful and intangible sentiment, the sooner will order be secured in China. Hesitation to recognize the republican cause will certainly prolong the stagnation of trade and will be responsible for much bloodshed, should fighting begin again."

Red Cross Founder Honored.

Means "Absolutism."

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 26.—"If Roosevelt is put in the White House in 1912, we will never get him out again except feet first," was the statement of Col. Henry Watterson, editor of The Louisville Courier Journal, in commenting on the Republican situation throughout the conutry.

Col. Watterson expressed the belief that the long looked-for change of parties was at hand, but he has not declared his choice for the Democratic nomination.

Col. Watterson declared that in his opinion the Republicans could not elect either Roosevelt or Taft, and said the election of the former president, abrogating the third term tradition, would be a step toward absolutism.

Sardinian's Rough Trip.

Five Hundred Persians Are Massacred Near Resht

SLAYING STILL GOES ON

London, Dec. 26.—A massacre has been going on in Resht since Saturday, according to official Persian telegrams received in London yesterday. These state that on Sunday 500 Persians were killed by the Russians, many of them being women and children. The people, it is said, have been exhorted not to fight, and not to give the slightest provocation, but the massacre still continues.

Resht is the capital of the Province of Ghilan, and has 40,000 inhabitants. The Government house has been bombarded, and many Government officials and police have been killed. Private houses have been demolished.

According to other despatches the Russians killed four unarmed Mohammedans in the Armenian quarter of Tabriz, during the fighting in that city.

"The people of Persia," says the despatch, "are stupefied at the attitude of the Russians, especially as these outrages have followed immediately on the acceptance by Persian of the second Russian ultimatum, and when Persia has shown every desire and disposition to conciliate Russia and establish friendly relations."

Resented Shuster's Dismissal.

PLANTAGENET, ONT. Jan. 31st. 1910.

"About March 1st. 1909, I was taken deathly sick with Liver Congestion and Stomach Trouble. I failed from 125 pounds to 80 pounds and was confined to bed for eight weeks. The doctors said they could do nothing for me, and as a last resort, one of the doctors told me to try "Fruit-a-tives"—If they would not cure me, nothing would.

My husband bought some "Fruit-a-tives" and inside of ten days, I was able to leave my bed. My stomach got strong and I could eat and retain my food. Today, I weigh 125 pounds".

HOW MR. SOFTLEIGH SANG THE CAROLS

BY CULVERLEY FORD.
(Short Story.)

"Christians, awake! Salute the Happy Morn."

Mr. Softleigh sat up suddenly in bed as the tones of a cracked voice, accompanied by a flute and trombone very much at variance as regards pitch, rose on the midnight air.

"Awake!" he snorted. "There are times when one regrets the days of heathendom, when there was a chance to sleep. That's the third lot to-night, and I'm hanged if I'll stand it."

"Have a little patience, my dear," his wife interposed. "They will soon go away, and, after all, it is only seasonable, and——"

"Seasonable!" retorted Softleigh. "What d'you think those brutes out there care for that sentimental rubbish. The only season they think of is what goes with the turkey, and how to force other people's money from them to buy it."

"Not many of those poor folk can think of turkeys, John, dear. I admit they possibly think more of the material side of——"

"Material!" Softleigh ejaculated as a more than ordinary strident note came from the trombone. "They won't get any 'material' out of me, unless it's a flatiron!"

He bounced out of bed and made for the window, stubbing his toe against a forgotten chair to the further detriment of his temper.

"Get away!" he shouted, flinging up the lower sash. "Get home to bed. You'll get nothing here!"

The cracked voice and the accompaniment stopped instantly, to be succeeded by the sound of a hollow cough.

The icy sleet, driven in through the open window by a bitter wind, stung Softleigh's cheeks like a sharp needle points.

The feeble light of the lantern which one of the waits carried gave him a momentary glimpse of a cadaverous-looking face, with the lips still bent over the mute flute, the sunken eyes turned upwards, gazing at him. A face to haunt one at festive times, like the skeleton at the feasts of Egypt.

Softleigh closed the window with a bang, groped his way to the bed, and shivered down under the snug coverings.

A fiercer blast shook the casement, the sleet beat furiously against the panes, but not so hard as to stifle the sound of a hollow cough nor the shuffling of departing feet.

"All part of the game!" growled Softleigh, as he rolled over and composed himself to sleep.

But sleep was for a long time out of the question. One Christian, at anyrate, was very much awake, staring out over the bedclothes into the dark corners of the comfortable room, fancying those eyes were still gazing at him, seeming to hear that racking cough in every successive blast of wintry wind.

When at last he did sleep, it was only to dream that he was wandering around in his pyjamas through miles of frozen streets, peering up at gaunt windows, from each of which accusing eyes stared down upon him, and ghastly, threatening hands beckoned him away, whilst his soundless voice vainly tried to tell out the words of the grand old hymn.

This was just a week before Christmas, and during that week his usual rest was disturbed by a plethora of carol singers and waits, who seemed to take a persistent delight in selecting his road, and more particularly his house, for the exercise of their respective gifts in things harmonic.

"A set of humbugs and extortioners," he growled. "Set on to annoy me by those others I sent packing. I'd like to catch that lot round here and give 'em a piece of my mind!"

But the cracked voice and the conflicting flute and trombone were not again in evidence—a fact which, curiously enough, seemed to cause Mr. Softleigh annoyance rather than satisfaction.

It would seem as if another reason prompted his desire to see once more that face which the dim light of the lantern had shown him.

He had thought more than usual of it this Christmas Eve, and was in no very happy frame of mind when he set out from the office for home.

A chill, miserable evening it was, too, made doubly so by a dreary fog, which seemed to cling to one with a clammy embrace.

Mr. Softleigh shivered as he hurried along, burying his head and face as far as he could in the upturned collar of his furlined coat.

Figures loomed out of the fog, colliding with him, and vanishing again before he had steadied himself on the greasy pavement.

His way lay for a short distance through the borough, where the fog seemed heavier and laden with foul odours.

Th raucous shouts of unseen men, the incessant rumble of the slow moving traffic, the shrill voices of unkempt women and children emerging from the noisome courts and alleys oppressed Softleigh with the sense of a hideous nightmare.

And in the midst of it he saw the cadaverous face and sunken eyes of the flute player.

Not in imagination, as he at first believed, but close to him in the yellow glare of the shop lights.

Below that terrible face Softleigh unconsciously noted the rounded shoulders and hollowed chest, across which two skeleton hands clutched the threadbare jacket, as if vainly trying to prevent the entrance of the deadly chill.

With a gasp Softleigh stood aside. The man, with an awkward movement of apology, passed on, and vanished round the corner of the side street.

Mr. Softleigh stood rooted to the spot then, overcome by a sudden determination, followed him.

Bu the fog had swallowed him up. After proceeding as rapidly as possible for a hundred yards, Mr. Softleigh realized that it was useless, and slowly retraced his steps.

Just before he reached the corner a man came hurriedly from the side door of a shop. Again Softleigh recognized the man of the flute.

He called to him, but the roar of the traffic in the main road must have drowned his voice, for the man only hurried on and was shut out by the fog.

But not before some white object, dropping from him close by the lighted window, fluttered to the pavement at Softleigh's feet. He picked it up and glanced at it, then stopped by the window, as he saw it was a pawn ticket.

"Silver-mounted flute, 5s 6d," read Softleigh, and he hurried on again, hoping to see the man, but all to no purpose. He stopped again and examined the ticket.

What a story that ticket told! How readily would the man part with everything before he let that go which was at once his treasure and only means of support! And how desperate his needs that he had parted with it now! Mr. Softleigh gulped down something and surreptitiously passed his glove across his eyes, perhaps the better to read what was on the ticket.

He read the name and address of the pawnbroker, realizing that it was the shop from which the man had emerged. The man's name and address was writen on it too: "Paul Hendry, 8 Pieman's Court, Tabard Street," and as he read Mr. Softleigh's determination was made.

He hurried back to the pawnbroker's and laid the ticket down before the assistant, who eyed it and Softleigh suspiciously.

"Bought it?" he ejaculated.

"No, but I wish to redeem the pledge," Softleigh answered. "Perhaps you can tell me something of this man?"

"Nothin', except he's been here pretty regular lately. Popped everythin' 'e 'ad I sh'd jedge. Guess this is his last act, but by the looks of 'im I shouldn't think 'e'll need it again."

He handed the instrument, evidently a good one, to Mr Softleigh, and carelessly tossed the moeny into the till.

Mr Softleigh slipped the flute into the inside pocket of his overcoat and went out. He asked the direction of a policeman who stood under the lamp at a corner, and walked away under the murky glare of the shops till he turned off into the gloomier quarter of Tabard Street.

A knot of vicious-looking men and women stood outside a vaporous fried fish shop, forcing him out into the roadway. Their conversation ceased abruptly as they eyed him. Then he heard a half smothered laugh, mutterings and whisperings. It seemed to him that footsteps came sliding and shuffling along the pavement behind him, but the fog hid the forms. A sense of impending danger came strongly upon him, and though prudence suggested a retreat, obstinacy forced him on.

Suddenly a man coming up from behind lurched heavily against him, driving him up against the house, and, stopping, poured out a volley of abuse.

As if by magic, from all sides men emerged from the fog and crowded round, silent, expectant.

Softleigh, thinking argument useless, went boldly forward.

But the first man suddenly reached out a hand, and grasping his coat collar: "Off with it, boys," he urged hoarsely. "Quick's the word!"

He gave a vigorous wrench, but Softleigh's stout arms closed instinctively across his chest. That coat had cost him fifteen guineas, and he was not dropping that without a struggle.

At their leader's cry the rest, like a pack of wolves close by. One snatched his hat and made off, another tore his umbrella away, whilst four or five other hands went at his necktie in a desperate scramble to secure the golden fastener, thereby nearly throttling him and leaving his watch and chain an easy prey to others of the crew.

It looked, indeed, as if it would not be many seconds before every stitch would be pulled off him, when a shrill vibrant whistle rose on the air, and the crowd vanished as magically as it had formed, leaving Softleigh dishevelled, breathless, and minus the best part of his portable property, leaning up against the side wall of the court.

He waited expecting to see a policeman, but none appeared. No doubt one was somewhere near, and the whistle had been a warning from a confederate of the gang. But it was useless to look for him in the fog, and even if one were there, he certainly could not recover the lost property at the moment.

But the flute was safe. That was all Softleigh seemed to think about, and he instantly determined to prosecute his errand.

A child carrying a small parcel came towards him.

"Where's Pieman's Court?" he asked.

"Are you the doctor?" she answered. "Then come along quick."

Evidently she was on her way to the court. He followed her with difficulty till she turned in at an open doorway. There was a feeble lamp burning in the passage. He saw the number eight, on the door.

The child was stumbling up the stairs, still calling to him to follow. Half hesitatingly, he did so.

The odours of the house were appalling. Good heavens! That men, women, and children should live and lie in such holes as these!

As he groped his way along the first landing a door opened above. A narrow shaft of light showed him the second flight of stairs, and the child turned and beckoned to him impatiently.

As he reached the open door the dread sound of a hollow cough came from the room. He knew that he had found the place. It was the same cough, but more violent, that he had heard that night.

Without hesitation he entered the room, taking in the sordid details almost at a glance.

There was not a stick of furniture in the place. A piece of sacking stretched across the broken window. In the further corner, on other bits of sacking, lay a form racked by that heart-rending cough. By the side of that form knelt a man holding a chipped cup, trying to pour some of its contents down the sick man's throat.

The only cheerful thing in all the place was a bright fire made up with contrasting lavishness. A tin saucepan containing some liquid was heating on it.

The child said something as Softleigh entered. The kneeling man looked round. It was the owner of the flute.

"You've come along quick, doctor," he said, "which is good of you, but I fear you are too late!"

The voice and speech of an educated man!

"My dear sir," answered Softleigh, stepping forward, "I'm sorry you are mistaken. I am not a doctor. I am here on another errand. But we can more pressing here."

He, too, knelt down by the sick man. It seemed to him that already death had set the imprint of its fingers upon him. Such a pitiful wreck of humanity, yet hardly more so than his comrade who nursed him.

Softleigh rose quickly. The flute player stared at him wonderingly. What did he there? Softleigh read the question in his eyes.

"No time to explain now," he said, hurriedly. "We must act. This is no night to move him, or we would take him to the hospital."

"Who are you?" cried the flute player, rising suddenly and thrusting his gaunt face close to Softleigh's. "Hospital! Never! I have promised him! Everything has gone, that I might keep him here. Out with you! I'll have no poor law rascals to gloat over their work and poison his last hours!"

He spoke quiely, yet with such concentrated fury that Mr. Softleigh backed away.

"You're mistaken," he said, gently. "I owe this poor fellow and yourself a debt. If it is not too late to repay him I shall never forgive myself. This, I hope, will partly prove my good faith," and so saying he drew from his pocket the silver-mounted flute.

Such a change as came over the man's face! He clutched the instrument and pressed it to his breast, his countenance transfigured by the joy that possessed him. His spare frame, weakened by fasting, trembled under the excitement. His eyes softened like a child's as he gazed at Softleigh.

The latter held out his hand, which was instantly grasped. "Now we understand each other better," he said. "Can you spare the child to show me to Borough High Street? I was badly used coming here. Being with her they would let me pass."

He was out of the room and halfway down the stairs before he had finished, the child running eagerly forward to accompany him.

Half an hour later he was back again, but this time he was accompanied by various men, some of whom drew well-laden handcarts, whilst others carried baskets or sacks.

Such a business it was getting the things into the house and up the narrow stairs? But all done as quietly as possible so as to disturb the sick man as little as might be.

Such of the denizens of Pieman's Court who happened to be at home gathered round to see this wonder. The excitement was quickly communicated to Tabard Street, and before the last of the purchases were safely housed Pieman's Court was impassable.

And so it came about that several of those who had attacked Mr. Softleigh saw him directing these operations, and learning quickly what manner of errand he was upon, felt for almost the first time in their existence, the pricklings of that curious part of themselves called conscience, and knew that they were not altogether brutes.

But what of the sick man and the room where he lay? Who that had seen them half an hour previously would recognize man or place now?

The sick man lay comfortably on a decent bed, between white, well aired sheets, and warm blankets, all of which Mr. Softleigh had hired bodily and at exorbitant rates from a coffee shop in the Borough High Street.

The floor was covered by a warm-tinted square of carpet, on which stood a table and four chairs, with an armchair by the fireplace. There was another bed at the other side of the room, a curtain at the window, and a screen before the door to keep the draught off the sick man; whilst along the floor at one side was an array of crockery and cooking utensils, with good things enough to feed the sick man and his companions for a month.

And in the midst of it all stood Softleigh, beaming at the doctor, whom he had called up, and who was just declaring that the sick man would pull through with care and nourishing food.

"A bad bronchial case, certainly, aggravated by starvation," the doctor whispers. "I'll send a nurse as you suggest, and you may rest assured we'll see him through, though it may be some time before he is restored to complete health."

And what of the flute player? He has stood quite still, as if in a dream, hugging his flute to him, staring helplessly as Softleigh and his band transform the room and tend his friend.

He lisens to what the doctor says, but still doesn't move, though that look of joy once more illumines his want-worn face.

But as the doctor leaves the room he suddenly moves, stumbles, rather than walks, to where Softleigh is standing near the bed, and falls on his knees, too overcome to speak.

Then Softleigh gently tells his story, whilst the two men and the

"MY STOMACH IS FINE

Since Taking Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets"

Mrs. J. Merkhuger, Waterloo, Ont., enthusiastically recommends Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets. Her experience with them, as she outlines it, explains why.

"I was greatly troubled with my stomach", she writes. "I had taken so much medicine that I might say to take any more would only be making it worse. My stomach just felt raw. I read of Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets, and a lady friend told me they were very easy to take, so I thought I would give them a trial and really they worked wonders. Anyone having anything wrong with his stomach should give Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets a trial, they will do the rest. My stomach is fine now and I can eat any food."

One of the many good features of Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets is that they are so pleasant and easy to take. The relief they give from heartburn, flatulence, biliousness and dyspepsia is prompt and permanent. Try one after each meal—they'll make you feel like a new person.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Bacchus Tabernacle.

PASTOR RUSSELL LOSES A SUNDAY

Adjustment of the Calendar Responsible — Christmas Sermon Instead.

Pacific Mid-ocean, Dec. 25th.—The Foreign Missions Investigation Committee, as well as other passengers, had the novel experience of losing a day from the calendar—a Sunday at that. They retired on Saturday the 23rd and awakened in the morning of December 25th. It was determined, however, that this adjustment of the calendar should work no real loss; but that Sunday and Christmas day should be observed as one. Pastor Russell was called upon for a sermon in the interest of his immediate hearers and also for his world-wide congregation of millions reached through the public press. Responding, the Pastor said:

It is a new experience to many of us—this losing of a day for the rectification of the calendar. And yet I reflect that, after all, many of us have lost many days each year in a very similar manner. As we journeyed westward we have kept setting our watches back rapidly, and thus making our days twenty-five hours long, until now we have reached the reckoning period, and must make good all those advanced hours by striking out one whole day. So some of us have lengthened our days into nights and have figuratively burned the candle at both ends, only to find that in the end there must be compensations, and that we really have gained nothing over those who have taken life moderately.

Some have done this in the pursuit of pleasure, others in pursuit of wealth, others in pursuit of honor. We admit that extraordinary effort in any of these directions is unwise. Only in two ways could an enforced expenditure of life's energies be approved as wise and judicious. One of these would be in the service of our God, the other in the service of fellow-men; and it is not strange that in Divine providence what might be termed "over-exertion" in these two directions is usually non-injurious, and that there are compensations of mental and spiritual rest and refreshment, peace and joy obtainable in no other quarter—which the world can neither give nor take away.

Since we are obliged to lose a Sunday, how fortunate we are in having Christmas day instead, and thus to combine in our experiences the two days which mean so much to us in a commemorative way and as "shadows of better things to come." (Hebrews x. 1). The birth of Jesus as the Babe of Bethlehem already links this day in our minds with His birth from the dead on the first day of the week. And these two events, inseparable in their importance to the Church and the world, combine peculiarly before our minds to-day.

Christmas day reminds us of the necessity there was for a perfect man to give himself as the Ransom-price—the corresponding price for the first Adam's transgression—before reconciliation with the Father could be possible. Hence, as the Scriptures portray, the great Logos, the "First-born of every creature" (Colossians i, 15), humbled Himself, laid aside His glory and dignity as a spirit being and took the lower, the human nature, in order "that He, by the grace of God, should taste death for every man." (Hebrews ii, 9.) Begotten of the Holy Spirit at the time of His consecration at baptism, it was necessary that He should be born of the Spirit in the resurrection—that He should become "the First-fruits of them that slept," "the First-born among many brethren," "the First-born from the dead." (II. Corinthians xv, 20; Romans viii, 29; Colossians i, 18.)

My text for the occasion is the message of the angels who announced the Saviour's birth—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."—Luke ii, 14.

It is essential that the dignity, the glory, the honor of our Omnipotent Creator should be maintained; and it is advantageous to the interests of all His creatures to know of His greatness, to appreciate His glory and to render to Him the homage His glorious character deserves. It may be asked, Why should the angels lay special stress upon Divine glory and honor at such a time? Had there been any reflection against the Divine glory and honor? We answer, Yes. For more than four thousand years our earth, so large to us, but really so small a portion of the Universe, had been a scene of disorder quite out of accord with the remainder of that Universe. It had been a blot upon the otherwise wonderful and gracious management of the Great Creator. Elsewhere, God's will was perfectly done. Amongst men there had been for forty centuries a reign of sin and death. Satan exercised usurped influence over mankind, preying upon human weakness, ignorance and superstition. As the Apostle declares, he had become "the god of this world," "who now worketh in the children of disobedience" (II. Cor. iv, 4; Eph. ii, 2). In the language of Jesus he was the Prince, or ruler, of this world, in that the great mass of mankind, some willingly, more ignorantly, were his servants.

We can only imagine how matters must have appeared to the holy angels, who for long centuries previously had witnessed no disloyalty to God and no unhappiness amongst His creatures on any plane of being; for them now to see Satan in rebellion and other angels following his course and becoming demons, and to see man, made in God's image, demonized and his heart of tenderness turned to a heart of stone and selfishness, so that

"Man's inhumanity to man
Makes countless thousands mourn"—

All this must have been bewildering to the loyal angels who doubtless wondered whether or not the Universe could thus pass from the control of the Almighty Creator. Undoubtedly they were aware of the Divine intimation of a better day, as expressed in the promise that the Seed of the woman should ultimately bruise the Serpent's head; but ah, things had gone from bad to worse since that glorious promise was made, and Divine Power seemed less able than ever to grapple with the powers of darkness. How they must have wondered at this!

Undoubtedly the angels had heard of the Divine promise made to Abraham, and buttressed with the Divine oath, that by these two immutable assurances—God's Word and His oath—the blessings promised might be confidently expected. And that promise was twofold: (1) That all the families of the earth should eventually be blessed, and (2) that this blessing should come to them through Abraham's posterity or seed. We can well imagine how this joyful news would spread amongst the heavenly hosts: "A better day is coming; the reign of sin and death in the world is to be stopped! The blessing of the Lord is to reach the fallen race and put an end to ignorance, superstition, blindness, sin, dying, crying and pain!" "Ah!" they must have said, "Finally God is about to take action and to demonstrate His great Power. We felt sure all along that He possessed this Power; and yet it seems strange to us that He did not exercise it sooner."

But these rejoicing angels must have wearied as they perceived the apparent failure of their expectations. After long years of waiting, Ishmael was born, but seemed a very unsuitable heir—scarcely a fulfillment of the promise. Long years later came Isaac, whose supernatural birth seemed to point to the fulfilment of the promise. But he accomplished nothing wonderful and died, transmitting the glorious promise and hope to Jacob. More long years passed and Jacob did not fulfil the promise, but left it to his family as a whole—a rather unpromising family as respected the blessing of mankind. Then the nation of Israel, so far from blessing other nations, went into bondage to the Egyptians; and all of God's promises seemed to have failed.

Ah! what a testing He gave the loyal angels! How their faith in Wisdom and Power Divine must have been tried! Finally, under Moses, the Divinely appointed leader, the nation of Israel suddenly emerged from slavery and, under Divine favor reached Mt. Sinai and there entered into Covenant-relationship with God, as the seed of Abraham, heirs of the original promise of blessing the world. Now matters began to look toward a fulfilment of the gracious promise that in Abraham and his seed all the families of the earth would be blessed—notwithstanding the fact that Abraham was dead.

The trying experiences of the wilderness must have been disappointing, not only to the Israelites, but also to the interested angels beyond the veil, who St. Peter tells us, earnestly desired to look into these things and sought for the fulfilment of the promise. (I. Peter i, 10, 11.) Finally Canaan, the land of promise, was reached, but the progress of Israel toward world-domination and blessing was slow. One after another of their enemies brought them under tribute. Then came their prosperity for a time under King David, who set up the throne of the kingdom of the Lord, and then under King Solomon, the glories of whose kingdom typified that of the coming Messiah, of which they knew nothing. Then came further failures, Babylonian captivities—all wasting discouragements.

Meantime the discouraged Israelites found that they themselves were not receiving the blessing that they had hoped for under the Law Covenant—everlasting life. The Law had said that whoever would act in harmony with its commands would have life; but they were all dying. The lesson to them was their own weakness, their inability to keep the Law—the glorious Law of God, which is the measure of a perfect man's ability—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, mind, soul and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself." As St. Paul declares, they could keep this Law only with their minds—they could will to keep it, but to perform all their good will in this respect was impossible, because of the weakness of their flesh. The more noble and loyal of them, realised their own weakness, cried out to God for help; while others, Pharisaically, boasted of their holiness.

In the meantime, through the Prophets, God informed Israel that He foreknew their inability to comply with the terms of their Law Covenant; but that He would send them another Mediator, greater than Moses, who would inaugurate for them a still better Covenant, under which their sins and iniquities and weaknesses would be taken away, and their stoniness of heart would gradually give place again to tenderness—to hearts of flesh. (Jeremiah xxxi, 31.) The Mediator, Messenger or Servant of that New Covenant which will be the temporary requirement for Israel and for the world, is referred to as "the Messenger of the Covenant, whom ye delight in." (Malachi iii, 1.) They called Him Messiah and kept waiting for Him to appear in glory and in power, to assume the reins of government over their nation—to uplift them to power and influence and make them His messengers and servants in conveying His laws and regulations to all the families of the earth, for the uplifting and blessing of all.

The angels who announced the birth of Jesus well knew His rank and relationship to the Father; that He had left the glory of His heavenly station to become through His mother a member of Adam's race, and that He was, therefore, a suitable one to be the Redeemer or Ransomer of the race. The angels realised that in this Saviour lay all the hope of Abraham and his seed and of all the families of the earth. If they had waited long and had been often disappointed they realised that at last they were in the midst of wonderful events. "Unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders." No wonder they sang, "Glory to God in the highest!" To them our Saviour's birth must have meant, "Now God's glorious character, in which we have always had faith, is about to be vindicated; and this great event, the birth of Jesus, marks the beginning of the fulfilment of God's gracious promise which He bound with His oath, and which all along, therefore, we knew could not fail nor be set aside." But they sang more—"Peace on earth, good will toward men." They perceived that sin, rebellion and the Divine sentence—the curse of death—were to be removed in a legal, judicious manner, and that for this purpose the Logos had humbled Himself to human nature.

Their eyes of faith looked down into the future, and though not understanding how it would be accomplished they had unwavering confidence in God that eventually the "serpent" of sin would be crushed and Adam and his race released from the bondage of sin and death; and they perceive that somehow all this was associated with the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem. We can imagine with what interest they told the "good tidings of great joy for all people" and sang "Glory to God."

It must have been a cause of still further bewilderment to the angels when they perceived that Israel rejected Jesus and ultimately crucified Him. Then came His resurrection on the third day; and they beheld Him a Spirit Being of the highest order—divine nature. What could it mean? They must still wait and watch, listen and note the gradual unfolding of the Divine Program. After encouraging and instructing His disciples the Logos ascended up on high and appeared in the presence of God. There He was proclaimed "Lord of All" and given a position of dignity next to the father—at the right hand of the Majesty on high. Gradually the angels came to understand that the Divine Law, which had sentenced man to death, was immutable; and that it was therefore necessary that Jesus should become flesh, not to aid the Jewish nation and become an earthly king, but to redeem Israel and all of Adam's race, and, ascending up on high, thus to be qualified as the great antitypical Priest to make reconciliation for iniquity—"yea, for the rebellious also" (Ps. lxviii, 18).

Next it was manifest that although Israel did not receive the blessing sought for, yet the elect, the saintly few who were ready received it and, by the begetting of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost and after, became sons of God and joint-heirs with Messiah as members of the spiritual Seed. But there were not enough of these. "Israelites indeed" to make up the predestined number, and hence, in harmony with prophecies not previously noted, a drawing and a calling work proceeded amongst the Gentiles to gather from them a sufficient number to complete the Divine forcordination, as the Bride class—Messiah's joint-heirs. For more than eighteen centuries this work of selecting has proceeded; and throughout this period the holy angels have learned more and more respecting Divine Love, Justice, Wisdom and Power. But God's name has not yet been glorified, and "peace on earth" has not been established. The reign of sin and death still continues.

Now, my dear friends, unless I misunderstand God's Word, we are living at the most wonderful period of earth's history. The elect Bride of Christ, forcordained to share with Him the glory of His Messianic Kingdom, is nearly completed; and in a great time of trouble—already near—there will be a transferring of the kingdoms of this world to the rule of Messiah. Satan, the Prince of Darkness, will be bound for a thousand years; Christ, the Prince of Light (His Church, His Bride, in association), as the Seed of Abraham, will reign during that thousand years for the blessing of Adam and his race—"all the families of the earth."

A Fighting Missionary.

The famous English prizefighter, Bendigo, "found religion" and turned missionary. His methods, however, sometimes smacked of his past. Once a group of men was pointed out to him with the remark that they were atheists.

"Atheists—what's Atheists?" queried Bendigo.

He was told.

"Eh! Don't believe in no God, don't they?" he exclaimed. "'Ere, hold my coat!"

"I hope so," replied the conservative father. "I pay the tailor extra to keep 'em that way."

Naval Surgeon's Pay.

Bats.

Bats are often regarded with as much horror as snakes, the wheeling flight of the little creatures in the twilight, their dusky forms, shroud-like wings and fiery eyes seeming to league them with the supernatural. But they are generally not only harmless, but useful. They are a scourge to insects of every kind, from the mosquito upward. The big bats of the Indian peninsula are considered table luxuries by the natives.

Divers' Dress.

Divers' boots weigh twenty pounds apiece. The helmet weighs forty pounds, and the diver carries eighty pounds' weight besides.

LOST FACE

By Jack London

IT was the end. Subienkow had travelled a long trail of bitterness and horror, homing like a dove for the capitals of Europe, and here, further away than ever, in Russian America, the trail ceased.

He sat in the snow, arms tied behind him, waiting the torture. He stared curiously before him at a huge Cossack, prone in the snow, screaming in agony. The men had finished handling the giant and turned him over to the women. That they exceeded the fiendishness of the men the man's frightful yells attested.

Subienkow looked on and shuddered. He was not afraid to die. He had carried his life too long in his hands on that weary trail from Warsaw to Nulato to shudder at mere dying. But he objected to the torture. It offended his soul. And this offence, in turn, was not due to the mere pain he must endure, but to the sorry spectacle the pain would make of him. He knew he would yell and scream as Big Ivan was yelling and screaming. He knew he would pray, and beg, and entreat, even as Big Ivan and the others that had gone before. This would not be nice. To pass out gravely and cleanly, with a smile and a jest—ah, that would have been the way! But to lose control, to have his soul upset by the pangs of the flesh, to screech and gibber like an ape, to become the veriest beast—ah, that was what was so terrible.

There had been no chance to escape. From the beginning, when he dreamed the fiery dream of Poland's independence, he had become a puppet in the hands of Fate. From the beginning at Warsaw, at St. Petersburg, in the Siberian mines, in Kamchatka, on the crazy boats of the fur thieves, Fate had been driving him to this end. Without doubt in the foundations of the world was graved this end for him—for him, who was so fin and sensitive, whose nerves scarcely sheltered under his skin, who was a dreamer and a poet and an artist. Before he, as he, was dreamed of it had been determined that the quivering bundle of sensitiveness that constituted him should be doomed to live in raw and howling savagery and to die in this far land of night, in this dark place beyond the last boundaries of the world.

He sighed. So that thing before him, that thing that screamed, was Big Ivan—Big Ivan the giant, the man without nerves, the man of iron, the Cossack turned freebooter of the seas, who was as phlegmatic as an ox, with a nervous system so low that what was pain to ordinary men was scarcely a tickle to him. Well, well, trust these Nulato Indians to find Big Ivan's nerves and trace them to the roots of his quivering soul. They were certainly doing it. Listen to that! A yell more hideously awful than any that had gone before ripped and tore through Subienkow's consciousness. It was fearful, it was inconceivable, that a man could suffer so much and yet live. Big Ivan was paying for his low order of nerves. Already he had lasted twice as long as any of the others, and still his great lungs shrieked his agony.

Subienkow felt that he could not stand the Cossack's sufferings much longer. Why didn't Ivan die? He would go mad if that screaming did not cease. But when it did cease his turn would come. He, Rudolph Subienkow, would have his nails torn out by the roots, his finger ends sliced off in strips, thin strips, a section at a time, his nose ——. He almost shrieked himself at thought of the horrors awaiting him. And there was Yakaga awaiting him, too, grinning at him even now in anticipation—Yakaga, whom only last week he had kicked out of the fort, and upon whose face he had laid the lash of his dog whip. Yakaga would attend to him. Doubtlessly Yakaga was saving for him more refined tortures, more exquisite nerve racking. Ah! that must have been a good one, from the way Ivan screamed. The squaws bending over him stepped back with laughter and clapping of hands. Subienkow saw the monstrous thing that had been perpetrated, and began to laugh hysterically. The Indians looked at him in wonderment that he should laugh. But Subienkow could not stop.

This would not do. He controlled himself, the spasmodic twitchings slowly dying away. He strove to think of other things, and began reading back in his own life. He remembered his mother and his father, and the little spotted pony, and the French tutor who had taught him dancing and sneaked him an old worn copy of Voltaire. Once more he saw Paris, and dreary London, and gay Vienna, and Rome. And once more he saw that wild group of youths who had dreamed, even as he, the dream of an independent Poland, with a King of Poland on the throne at Warsaw. Ah, there it was that the long trail began. Well, he had lasted longest. One by one, beginning with the two executed at St. Petersburg, he took up the count of the passing of those brave spirits. Here, one had been beaten to death by a jailer, and there, in that blood stained highway of the exiles, where they had marched for weeks months, beaten and maltreated by their Cossack guards, another had dropped by the way. Always it had been savagery—brutal, bestial savagery. They had died—dear God, how they had died!—of fever, in the mines, under the knout. The last two had died after the escape, in the battle with the Cossacks, and he alone had won to Kamchatka with the stolen papers and the money of a traveller he had left lying in the snow.

It had been nothing but savagery. All the years, with his heart in studios and theatres and courts, he had been hemmed in by savagery. He had purchased his life with blood. Everybody had killed. He had killed that traveller for his passports. He had proved that he was a man of parts by duelling with two Russian officers in a single day. He had had to prove himself in order to win a place among the fur thieves. He had had to win that place. Behind him lay the thousand years long road across Siberia and Russia. He could not escape that way. The only way was ahead, across the dark and icy sea of Behring to Alaska. The way had led from savagery to deeper savagery. On the scurvy rotten ships of the fur thieves, out of food and out of water, buffeted by the interminable storms of that stormy sea, men had become animals. Thrice he had sailed east from Kamchatka. And thrice, after all manner of hardship and suffering, the survivors had come back to Kamchatka. There had been no one let for escape, and he could not go back the way he had come, for the mines and the knout awaited him.

Again, the fourth and last time, he had sailed east. He had been with those who first found the fabled Seal Islands; but he had not returned with them to share the wealth of furs in the mad orgies of Kamchatka. He had sworn never to go back. He knew that to win to those dear capitals of Europe he must go on. So he had changed ships and remained in the dark new land. His comrades were Slavonian hunters and Russian adventurers, Mongols and Tartars and Siberian aborigines; and through the savages of the new world they had cut a path of blood. They had massacred whole villages that refused to furnish the fur tribute; and they, in turn, had been massacred by whole ship's companies. He, with one Kina, had been the sole survivors of such a company. They had spent a winter of solitude and starvation on a lonely Aleutian isle, and their rescue in the spring by another fur ship had been one chance in a thousand.

But always the terrible savagery had hemmed him in. Passing from ship to ship, and ever refusing to return, he had come to the ship that explored south. All down the Alaska coast they had encountered nothing but hosts of savages. Every anchorage among the seething islands or under the frowning cliffs of the mainland had meant a battle or a storm. Either the gales blew, threatening destruction, or the war canoes came off, manned by howling savages, with the war paint on their faces, who came to learn the bloody virtues of the sea rovers' gunpowder. South, south they had coasted, clear to the mythland of California. Here, it was said, were Spanish adventurers who had fought their way up from Mexico. He had had hopes of these Spanish adventurers. Escaping to them, the rest would have been easy—a year or more, what did it matter more or less, and he would win to Mexico; then a ship, and Europe would be his. But they had met no Spaniards. Only had they encountered the same impregnable wall of savagery. The denizens of the coasts of the world, painted for war, had driven them back from the shores. At last, when one boat was cut off and every man killed, the commander had abandoned the quest and sailed back to the north.

The years had passed. In 1833 he had served under Tebenkoff when Michaelovski Redoubt was built. He had spent two years in the Kuskokwim country. Two summers, in the mouth of June, he had managed to be at the head of Kotzebue Sound. Here, at this time, the tribes assembled for barter. Here were to be found spotted deerskins from Siberia, ivory from the Diomedes, walrus skins from the shores of the Arctic, strange stone lamps, passing in trade from tribe to tribe, no one knew whence, and once a hunting knife of English make; and here, Subienkow knew, was the school in which to learn geography. For he met Eskimos from Norton Sound, from King Island and St. Lawrence Island, from Cape Prince of Wales and Point Barrow. Such places had other names, and their distances were measured in sleeps.

It was a vast region these trading savages came from, and a vaster region from which, by repeated trades, that these stone lamps and that steel knife had come. Subienkow bullied, and cajoled, and bribed. Every far journeyed or strange tribesman was brought before him. Perils uncountable and unthinkable were mentioned, as well as wild beasts, hostile tribes, impenetrable forests and mighty mountain ranges. But always from beyond came the rumor and the tale of white skinned men, blue of eye and fair of hair, who fought like devils and who sought always for furs. They were to the east—far, far to the east. No one had seen them. It was the word that had been passed along.

It was a hard school. One could not learn geography very well through the medium of strange dialects—from dark minds that mingled fact and fable and that measured distances by "sleeps" that varied according to the difficulty of the going. But at last came the whisper that gave Subienkow courage. In the east lay a great river where were those blue eyed men. The river was called the Yukon. South of Michaelovski Redoubt emptied another great river which the Russians knew as the Kwikpak. Then arose Malakoff, the Russian half-breed, to lead the wildest and most ferocious of the hell's broth of mongrel adventurers who had crossed from Kamchatka. Subienkow was his lieutenant. They threaded the mazes of the great delta of the Kwikpak, picked up the first low hills on the northern bank, and for half a thousand miles in skin canoes, loaded to the gunwales with trade goods and ammunition, fought their way against the five-knot current of a river that ran from two to ten miles wide in a channel many fathoms deep. Malakoff decided to build the fort at Nulato. Subienkow urged to go further. But he quickly reconciled himself to Nulato. The long winter was coming on. It would be better to wait. Early the following summer, when the ice was gone, he would disappear up the Kwikpak and work his way to the Hudson Bay Company's posts. Malakoff had never heard the whisper that the Kwikpak was the Yukon, and Subienkow did not tell him.

Come the building of the fort. It was enforced labor. The tiered walls of logs arose to the sighs and groans of the Nulato Indians. The lash was laid upon their backs, and it was the iron hand of the freebooters of the sea that laid on the lash. There were Indians that ran away, and when they were caught they were brought back and spreadeagled before the fort, where they and their tribe learned the efficacy of the knout. Two died under it, others were injured for life, and the rest took the lesson to heart and ran away no more. The snow was flying ere the fort was finished, and then it was time for furs. A heavy tribute was laid upon the tribe. Blows and lashings continued, and that the tribute should be paid the women and children were held as hostages and treated with the barbarity that only the fur thieves knew.

Well, it had been a sowing of blood, and now was come the harvest. The fort was gone. In the light of its burning half the fur thieves had been cut down. The other half had passed under the torture. Only Subienkow remained, or Subienkow and Big Ivan, if that whimpering, moaning thing in the snow could be called Big Ivan. Subienkow caught Yakaga grinning at him. There was no gainsaying Yakaga. The mark of the lash was still on his face. After all, Subienkow could not blame him, but he disliked the thought of what Yakaga would do to him. He thought of appealing to Makamuk, the head chief, but his judgment told him that such an appeal was useless. Then, too, he thought of bursting his bonds and dying fighting. Such an end would be quick. But he could not break his bonds. Caribou thongs were stronger than he. Still devising, another thought came to him. He signed for Makamuk and that an interpreter who knew the coast dialect should be brought.

"Oh, Makamuk," he said, "I am not minded to die. I am a great man, and it were foolishness for me to die. In truth, I shall not die. I am not like these other carrion"—he looked at the thing that once had been Big Ivan and stirred it contemptuously with his toe—"I am too wise to die. Behold, I have a great medicine. I alone know this medicine. Since I am not going to die I shall exchange this medicine with you."

"What is this medicine?" Makamuk demanded.

"It is a strange medicine." Subienkow debated with himself for a moment, as if loath to part with the secret. "I will tell you. A little bit of this medicine rubbed on the skin makes the skin hard like a rock, hard like iron, so that no cutting weapon can cut it. The strongest blow of a cutting weapon is a vain thing against it." A bone knife becomes like a piece of mud, and it will turn the edge of the iron knives we have brought among you. What will you give me for the secret of the medicine?"

"I will give you your life," Makamuk made answer through the interpreter.

Subienkow laughed scornfully.

"And you shall be a slave in my house until you die."

The Pole laughed more scornfully.

"Untie my hands and feet and let us talk," he said.

The chief made the sign, and when he was loosed Subienkow rolled a cigarette and lighted it.

"This is foolish talk," said Makamuk. "There is no such medicine. It cannot be. A cutting edge is stronger than any medicine."

The chief was incredulous, and yet he wavered. He had seen too many devilries of the fur thieves that worked. He could not wholly doubt.

"I will give you your life, but you shall not be a slave," he announced.

"More than that." Subienkow played his game as coolly as if he were bartering for a fox skin. "It is a very great medicine. It has saved my life many times. I want a sled and dogs and six of your hunters to travel with me down the river and give me safety to one day's sleep from Michaelovsky Redoubt."

"You must live here and teach us all of your devilries," was the reply.

Subienkow shrugged his shoulders and remained silent. He blew cigarette smoke out on the icy air and curiously regarded what remained of the big Cossack, which the children were now worrying.

"That scar!" Makamuk said suddenly, pointing to the Pole's neck, where a livid mark advertised the slash of a knife in a Kamchatkan brawl. "The medicine is not good. The cutting edge was stronger than the medicine."

"It was a strong man that drove the stroke," Subienkow considered. "Stronger than you, stronger than your strongest hunter, stronger than he." Again with the toe of his moccasin he touched the Cossack, who was now moaning and slubbering from a featureless face, a grisly spectacle, no longer conscious, yet in whose dismembered body the pain racked life clung and was loath to go. "Also, the medicine was weak. For at that place there were no berries of a certain kind, of which I see you have plenty in this country. The medicine here will be strong."

"I will let you go down river," said Makamuk, "and the sled and the dogs and the six hunters to give you safety shall be yours."

"You are slow," was the cool rejoinder. "You have committed an offence against my medicine in that you did not at once accept my terms. Behold, I now demand more. I want one hundred beaver skins." (Makamuk sneered.) "I want one hundred pounds of dried fish." (Makamuk nodded, for fish were plentiful and cheap.) "I want two sleds, one for me and one for my furs and fish. And my rifle must be returned to me. If you do not like the price, in a little while the price will grow."

Yakaga whispered to the chief.

"But how can I know your medicine is true medicine?" Makamuk asked.

"It is very easy. First, I shall go into the woods"——

L. A. SHAPER.

PADDLING IN SKIN CANOES AGAINST A FIVE-KNOT CURRENT.

Again Yakaga whispered to Makamuk, who made a suspicious dissent.

"You can send twenty hunters with me," Subienkow went on. "You see, I must get the berries and the roots with which to make the medicine. Then, when you have brought the two sleds and loaded on them the fish and the beaver skins and the rifle, and when you have told off the six hunters who will go with me—then, when all is ready, I will rub the medicine on my neck, so, and lay my neck there on that log. Then can your strongest hunter take the axe and strike three times on my neck. You yourself can strike the three times."

Makamuk stood with gaping mouth, drinking in this latest and most wonderful devilry of the fur thieves.

"But first," the Pole added, hastily, "after each blow I must put on fresh medicine. The axe is heavy and sharp, and I want no mistakes."

"All that you have asked shall be yours," Makamuk cried in a rush of acceptance. "Proceed to make your medicine."

Subienkow concealed his elation. He was playing a desperate game and there must be no slips. He spoke arrogantly.

"You have been slow. My medicine is offended. To make the offence clean you must give me your daughter."

He pointed to the girl, an unwholesome creature, with a cast in one eye and a bristling wolf tooth.

Makamuk was angry, but the Pole remained imperturbable, rolling and lighting another cigarette.

"Make haste," he threatened. "If you are not quick I shall demand yet more."

In the silence that followed the dreary northland scene faded from before him, and he saw once more his native land, and Paris, and, once, as he glanced at the wolf toothed girl, he remembered another girl, a singer and a dancer, whom he had known when first as a youth he came to Paris.

"What do you want with the girl?" Makamuk asked.

"To go down the river with me." Subienkow glanced her over critically. "She will make a good wife, and it is an honor worthy of my medicine to be married to your blood."

Again he remembered the singer and dancer and hummed aloud a song she had taught him. He lived the old life over, but in a detached, impersonal sort of way, looking at the memory pictures of his own life as if they were pictured in a book of anybody's life. The chief's voice, abruptly breaking the silence, startled him.

"It shall be done," said Makamuk. "The girl shall go down the river with you. But be it understood that I myself strike the three blows with the axe on your neck."

"But each time I shall put on the medicine," Subienkow answered, with a show of ill concealed anxiety.

"You shall put the medicine on after each blow. Here are the hunters who shall see you do not escape. Go into the forest and gather your medicine."

Makamuk had been convinced of the worth of the medicine by the Pole's rapacity. Surely nothing less than the greatest of medicines could enable a man in the shadow of death to stand up and drive an old woman's bargain.

"Besides," whispered Yakaga, when the Pole, with his guard, had disappeared among the spruce trees, "when you have learned the medicine you can easily destroy him."

"But how can I destroy him?" Makamuk argued. "His medicine will not let me destroy him."

"There will be some part where he has not rubbed the medicine," was Yakaga's reply. "We will destroy him through that part. It may be his ears. Very well; we will thrust a spear in one ear and out the other. Or it may be his eyes. Surely the medicine will be much too strong to rub on his eyes."

The chief nodded.

"You are wise, Yakaga. If he possesses no other devil things we will then destroy him."

Subienkow did not waste time in gathering the ingredients for his medicine. He selected whatsoever came handiest, such as spruce needles, the inner bark of the willow, a strip of birch bark, and a quantity of moss berries, which he made the hunters dig up for him from beneath the snow. A few frozen roots completed his supply and he led the way back to camp.

Makamuk and Yakaga crouched beside him, noting the quantities and kinds of the ingredients he dropped into the pot of boiling water.

"You must be careful that the moss berries go in first," he explained.

"And—oh, yes, one other thing—the finger of a man. Here, Yakaga, let me cut off your finger."

But Yakaga put his hands behind him and scowled.

"Just a small finger," Subienkow pleaded.

"Yakaga, give him your finger," Makamuk demanded.

"There be plenty of fingers lying around," Yakaga grunted, indicating the human wreckage in the snow of the score of persons who had been tortured to death.

"It must be the finger of a live man," the Pole objected.

"Then shall you have the finger of a live man." Yakaga strode over to the Cossack and sliced off a finger.

"He is not yet dead," he announced, flinging the bloody trophy in the snow at the Pole's feet. "Also it is a good finger because it is large."

Subienkow dropped it into the fire under the pot and began to sing. It was a French love sing that with great solemnity he sang into the brew.

"Without these words I utter into it the medicine is worthless," he explained. "The words are the chiefest strength of it. Behold, it is ready."

"Name me the words slowly, that I may know them," Makamuk commanded.

"Not until after the test. When the axe flies back three times from my neck, then will I give you the secret of the words."

"But if the medicine is not good medicine?" Makamuk queried anxiously.

Subienkow turned upon him wrathfully. "My medicine is always good. However, if it is not good, then do by me as you have done to the others. Cut me up a bit at a time, even as you have cut him up." He pointed to the Cossack. "The medicine is now cool. Thus, I rub it on my neck, saving this further medicine."

With great gravity he slowly intoned a line of the "Marseillaise," at the same time rubbing the villanous brew thoroughly into his neck.

An outcry interrupted his play-acting. The giant Cossack, with a last resurgence of his tremendous vitality, had arisen to his knees. Laughter and cries of surprise and applause arose from the Nulatos as Big Ivan, a screaming horror, began flinging himself about in the snow with mighty spasms.

Subienkow was made ill by the sight, but he mastered his qualms and made believe to be angry.

"This will not do," he said. "Finish him, and then we will make the test. Here, you, Yakaga, cut his throat so that his noise ceases."

While this was being done Subienkow turned to Makamuk.

"And remember, you are to strike hard. This is not baby work. Here, take the axe and strike the log so that I can see you strike like a man."

Makamuk obeyed, striking twice, precisely and with vigor, cutting out a large chip.

"It is well." Subienkow looked about him at the circle of savage faces, that somehow seemed to symbolize the wall of savagery that had hemmed him about ever since the Tsar's police had first arrested him in Warsaw. "Take your axe, Makamuk, and stand so. I shall lie down. When I raise my hand, strike, and strike with all your might. And be careful that no one stands behind you. The medicine is good, and the axe may bounce from off my neck and right out of your hands."

He looked at the two sleds, with the dogs in harness, loaded with furs and fish. His rifle lay on top the beaver skins. The six hunters who were to act as his guard stood by the sleds.

"Where is the girl?" the Pole demanded. "Bring her up to the sleds before the test goes on."

When this had been carried out, Subienkow lay down in the snow, resting his head on the log like a tired child about to sleep. He had lived so many dreary years that he was indeed tired.

"I laugh at you and your strength, O Makamuk," he said. "Strike, and strike hard!"

He lifted his hand. Makamuk swung the axe, a broad axe for the squaring of logs. The bright steel flashed through the frosty air, poised for a perceptible instant above Makamuk's head, then descended upon Subienkow's bare neck. Clear through flesh and bone it cut its way, biting deeply into the log beneath. The amazed savages saw the head bounce a yard away from the blood spouting trunk.

There was a great bewilderment and silence, while slowly it began to dawn in their minds that there had been no medicine. The fur thief had outwitted them. Alone of all their prisoners he had escaped the torture. That had been the stake for which he played. A great roar of laughter went up. Makamuk bowed his head in shame. The fur thief had fooled him. He had lost face before all his people. Still they continued to roar out their laughter. Makamuk turned, and with bowed head stalked away. He knew that thenceforth he would no longer be known as Makamuk. He would be Lost Face—the record of his shame would be with him until he died, and whenever the tribes gathered in the spring for the salmon or in the summer for the trading the story would pass back and forth across the campfires of how the fur thief died peaceably at a single stroke by the hand of Lost Face. "Who was Lost Face?" he could hear in anticipation some insolent young buck demand. "Oh, Lost Face," would be the answer, "he who once was Makamuk, in the days before he cut off the fur thief's head."

"And to tell the truth," says Softleigh, at the end, "I have been perfectly miserable since that night, and never felt so thankful for anything as I do now that I have found you, and been able to make some amends for my cruel conduct."

Both hastened to reassure him in words of simple, heartfelt sincerity.

"And never fear that you will lose your valuables, sir," the flute player declares. "I've lived here, perforce, long enough to know and be known by all about, and when the boys hear of the business here and what you have done, they'll return everything."

A confident statement, which was verified to the full the very next day.

A last Softleigh rises to go, when the sick man weakly detains him by the hand.

"It's getting nigh to Christmas morn now, sir," he said brokenly, between his fits of coughing, "and if so be as you'd not object, I'd dearly like to listen to the old hymn that, so to speak, has brought such blessings to me. I can't do much in the singing line myself now, but the child knows the words and my pal there—and a real good pal he's been to me and mine, through thick and thin—he can play as no one else can. The trombone ain't here, bein' out with another party; but we'll fare to do without him—that is, if you've no objection."

Object? Why it was the one thing Softleigh would have asked for, if he'd dared, and so Pieman's Court got another surprise. For the way the flute set the music, and the way the clear treble of the child chimed in, was wonderful. But both would have been nothing without Softleigh's deep bass and though he did not always find the right note, he knew every word of the dear old hymn, and the way he adjured his fellow Christians to awake set Pieman's Court frantic with delight, until at last every man, woman and child standing out in that fog-enshrouded court joined in heartily and to the very best of their ability, and the reeking houses echoed to such a carol-singing as had never been heard in the place before.

And so at length, his soul at peace with the thought of one more fault repented and atoned for, and supremely happy in the happiness he had been the humble instrument in providing John Softleigh returned home ready to enter fully into the joys and blessings of another Christmas day.

THREE STRAIGHT GAMES

BY MICHAEL J. PORTER
(Short Story.)

If the man selling a patent churn or washing machine had appeared in the village of Hillsdale he might possibly have made a sale, but it would only have been after a week and after he had listened to the gossip of the village and taken a seeming interest.

The stranger would have learned that Nancy Friars, the old maid, had almost taken a dose of paris green because she had to go home alone from prayer meeting; that Mr. Geo. Scott and wife were thinking of separatingbecause she liked codfish and he didn't; that Tom Henderson, the carpenter, had been disappointed in love, and that old Mrs. Travers was using a wrinkle remover and many, many other things. The biggest and best thing would have been saved till the last, and he would have been expected to exclaim that it was fierce Philetus Narmore was a feature of Hillsdale. He was 45 years old and a widower; he owned the woodenware factory and sung bass in church on Sunday; he was in charge of the fire works on Fourth of July, and he had been known to give $5 to the heathen of Africa all at once; he had brought about the arrest of a horse thief, and he had speculated in Wall Street and made $28. The stranger would have been told this astounding news as an appetizer and then the real corn beef and cabbage would have been set before him.

There were three widows in Hillsdale when Mr. Narmore became a widower. It was four weeks after the death of his wife before he smiled in public. Two hours later the gossips were betting two to one that he would marry one of the widows within six months. He didn't, however. He didn't within a year. He didn't at all.

It was said that any one of the three widows would give her old shoes to catch the widower. This was probably exaggerated. Had he proposed to Mrs. Dakin, Mrs. Stevens or Mrs. Everett the proposal would have been received with downcast eyes and taken under adyisement. There would have been no rushing into his arms. In a month or so he would have got his answer. It would have been a timid yes or no. The chances were even that he would have been turned down.

Mr. Narmore called on each of the widows. Why not? The gossips said he was courting, but they were mistaken. He called to talk about the weather, potato bugs, church affairs, fly screens and things of that sort. He always sat with his hat in his hands, and he always rose up exactly with the clock striking nine.

Each of the three widows received private and confidential advice as to how to "catch" the widower Narmore. They should invite him to dinner; they should simper; they should look at him coyly and archly; they should sigh and talk of their loneliness; they should boast of their economy and how much work they could get through with in a day. Even old maids who had never had a beau and never would have one sat down and looked as wise as Solomon and said:

"Ah, if you only understood how to handle a man as well as I do you'd bring Mr. Narmore to his knees within a week!"

Perhaps the three widows didn't want to marry again. Perhaps, but for the arrival of a fourth widow in the village, they would not have resorted to rats and puffs and powder and told white lies about their ages. The fourth widow was a Mrs. Harper. She was no younger or more attractive than the other three. She was seemingly handicapped by trailing in at the end of the string.

Within a week Mrs. Harper had heard all the gossip. Within a fortnight she had been introduced to Mr. Narmore. Within a month she had sent for her father to pay her a visit. He was 65 years old and had to come all the way from Illinois, but he came.

The widower Narmore had a fad. It was known to every one in Hillsdale, and yet those three widows, each one of whom might possibly have answered yes to a proposal, hadn't the acumen to take advantage of it. Mr. Narmore was a checker fiend. He didn't care for horse races, dog fights, pugilism, or baseball, but seat him in front of a checker-board and he was there for all night if necessary to beat the other player. He was the champion of Hillsdale county. In fact, he claimed the championship of the State.

"Father," said the widow Harper when her parent arrived, "aren't you accounted one of the best checker players in Pekin?"

"In Pekin! Why, Mary, I was champion of all Illinoy years ago; in Pekin! Lord love you, but I've beaten everything in Illinoy, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Kansas, Colorado, and Texas! Five years ago I issued a defi to the whole United States and nobody dared play me. Why do you ask?"

"There's a man right in this village who thinks he's some pumpkins at the game."

"I'll beat him with my eyes shut."

"He's won over everybody around here."

"I'll beat him in my sleep."

"But I don't want you to."

"Why?"

"Because I want to beat him myself. I want to beat him at checkers and then marry him."

"Shoo! I never heard the like. I thought women married for love."

"It's sometimes just as well to love after marriage. When I was a girl at home I played a pretty good game of checkers, didn't I?"

"Um-m-m-m. Yes, I remember."

"But not good enough?"

"Not good enough to beat a county champion."

"Now, listen. You are not to let on here in Hillsdale that you ever played a game. You are to devote six hours a day to instructing me. You have got to teach me all the tricks in the business."

"And then what?"

"I'll play against this man and beat him and marry him!"

"I don't see how beating a man at checkers is going——"

"You never mind that. Teach me to beat him and I'll take care of the rest."

Work was begun the next day, and it was 30 days and one more for good measure when the father said:

"That's enough, Mary. I can't teach you another darned trick. Say, you'll down that widower like a hill falling on him, but maybe he won't propose after all."

"Then maybe you've got a mushroom for a daughter!"

The game of checkers that was brought about between widow and widower will be remembered in Hillsdale until long after the children of that day are married off. It was brought about through badinage on the part of the widow—a little badinage and a little boasting. The novelty of playing checkers with a woman rather appealed to Mr. Narmore. The struggle came off in the Town Hall, where the hundreds of spectators could see. On that day an hour before the game began, the widow Dakin, the widow Stevens and the widow Everett fainted away, and had to have the doctor. They realized that they were out of the running.

There were predictions that the struggle, which was to be for the best three games out of five, would last a week. A whole day was the most conservative prediction, and many spectators brought noon luncheon. But things went like a cyclone after a rabbit. In two hours it was begun and ended. The widow Harper won three straight games, and the widower Narmore never had a chance. There were cheers and shouts and yells, and the victor was draped in Old Glory.

"Daughter, what was Narmore saying to you after the game?" asked the father after the two had reachd home.

"Why, he was asking me to be his wife."

"By thunder!"

"But doesn't a man want a wife that he can brag of and that everybody else will brag of? Thanks, daddy. You can go back home now if you are lonesome for mother!"

Of course all the bathers were ter-

Branches have been opened since the last Annual Meeting at Eastview, Ottawa South, Ottawa East, Avonlea, Sask., Star City, Sask., Grenville, Que., Sudbury, Ont., Timmins, Ont., and St. James, Winnipeg, and it is the intention of the Directors to open additional offices in the near future in the Westerly and South-westerly parts of the City of Ottawa, and in Westboro.

Premises for the use of the Bank have been secured at Fourth Avenue, Ottawa, Fairmount Avenue, Montreal, Virden, Man., and Kinistino, Sask. Your Directors have also purchased the premises on Sparks Street immediately behind the present Head Office Building—for the purpose of enlarging the present Head Office building.

The usual inspections have been made of the Head Office and Branches, and your Directors have thought it advisable to anticipate the requirements of the proposed amendments to the Bank Act (a draft revision of which was made public some months ago), by having an independent audit made prior to this meeting, by a well-known and highly regarded firm of Chartered Accountants, whose certificate will be found appended to the General Statement of Assets and Liabilities.

The Directors desire to express their appreciation of the manner in which the Officers of the Bank have devoted themselves to the various duties assigned to them during the year.

GEORGE BRYSON,
Vice-President.

SEEN AND HEARD

AN UNTRUTHFUL SIGN

ribly scared. A shark — actually a shark—had made its way to the usually placid waters of Puddleton! But when it was safely caught they flocked to the tent where it was being exhibited, and willingly paid their dimes for the privilege of seeing it.

"A man-eating shark," read the announcement outside the tent. It drew all Puddleton, including a couple of natives, who sat down on the grass for the best part of an hour and eyed the monster in awed expectation.

"Hey, there!" remarked one at last, as the attendant went by. "When's the man comin' on?"

"What man?" asked the attendant.

"Why, the man who's goin' to eat the shark!"

"There ain't none," retorted the attendant.

"Then what do you mean," exclaimed the yokel, angrily, "by sticking up a sign to say that you show a man eating shark, eh? Come along, Bill! I thought it was a swindle!" — New York Globe.

HAD THE HABIT—AND NERVE.

A slouchy-looking boy, of about 13 was standing on the street corner, when a well-dressed young man walked up to him.

"Say, sonny, can you give me a cigarette paper?"

"Yes, sir," said the boy and pulled one out of his pocket.

No sooner had the young man procured the paper than he said, "Couldn't you loan me a little tobacco, too?"

The boy pulled out his tobacco box and gave the young man enough to make a cigarette.

After he had completed the cigarette the young man said, "Now I'd like to trouble you for a match."

When the lad rammed his hand down he looked up and said, "You ain't got a darn thing but the habit, have you, mister?"—National Monthly.

STRICKEN WITH GENEROSITY.

A Scotsman brought his entire family of seven to visit a relative in London. They were entertained in a manner that left nothing to be asked for two weeks; theatres, suppers, cab rides about the city, excursions into the country. The whole time McPherson never put his hand in his pocket to pay for a thing.

When the family was going home, the Londoner and his cousin went into the buffet for a final glass. From force of habit he groped for his wallet; but Sandy gripped his arm.

"Na, na!" said he. "Ye've been verra gude to me an' mine this fortnicht past. Mon, we'll hae a toss for this lasht wee nipple!"

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS

There are 500 American women in Europe who left their native land as the brides of so-called noblemen. Out of these, 200 have been divorced or are separated from their husbands.

The number of marriages in the county of London last year was the lowest a thousand of the population on record. The number was 38.209, and the rate 15.9 a thousand, which compares with 17 a thousand in the previous year.

Australian farmers have taken to breeding opossums for their fur, by way of utilizing timbered sections of their land which have little value otherwise. It has been found that these animals can be bred to produce white, gray, brown or black fur.

A hive which contains 10,000 bees in February has 15,000 in March, 40,000 in April and from 60,000 to 80,000 in May.

An investigation into the causes of accidents among industrial workers, carried on for a number of years in Germany, shows that the greatest number of casualties occur on Saturday, while Monday is a close second, says The Medical Record. The large number of accidents on Saturday is generally explained by the fatigue of the week telling on the men, but it is noted also that the Monday accidents are about as numerous. This gives rise to the suggestion that the day of rest is not too wisely spent.

WHOOPING COUGH

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

WAS CONFESSING.

A. McConnell Was Writing a Statement When Arrested.

New York, Dec. 26.—Andrew McConnell, magazine writer and lecturer, was arrested at a reporter's desk in a morning newspaper office last night while, it is alleged, he was writing a confession of shooting and seriously wounding his divorced wife, Mrs. Marion D. McConnell.

Mrs. McConnell lies at her home in Orchard Grove, N.J., with a serious bullet wound in the head. The shooting is said to have occurred late Saturday night.

McConnell was operating a typewriter at a reporter's desk in The Times' office last night when a detective arrested him. The paper in the machine bore these words:

"I was forced to shoot the woman who was my wife. Absolute divorce was obtained last spring. Not one word was said regarding the divorce the night I shot her. She has tried to villify an innocent woman."

This was as far as had been written on the machine, but beside the typewriter the detective found a slip of paper upon which there was scrawly handwriting, which was hard to make out, as follows:

"Every person who has helped to build my work has been vilified by a woman who is either hopelessly insane or a designing fiend. When I made discovery in the electrical basis of life, which (three intelligible words) years later."

Detective Devoti declared that McConnell added to his alleged confession by declaring that he shot his wife because "She was always making me believe I was insane. She vilified me to different people and has run my character down."

Robbed Ten Cent Store.

New York, Dec. 26.—Graduates of the newer schools in burglary operated on a safe in a five and ten cent store, owned by S. S. Kresge, in Harlem, yesterday, and got away with nearly $4.000 in cash. The men entered by way of the sky light, drew electricity from a live wire to operate their drill and with nitro-glycerine easily blew off the safe door.

A roll of carpet was found which had been used to deaden the noise of the explosion, and beside the carpet was found kid gloves which the burglars had evidently used to avoid detection from finger prints, which have recently led to arrests and indictments of several alleged burglars.

Tribute to Farley.

Rome, Dec. 26.—Pontificial mass was celebrated yesterday by Cardinal Farley in his titular Church of Sancta Maria Sopra Minerva. Besides being a demonstration of piety, the ceremony was a great manifestation of respect and admiration for Cardinal Farley, who is commonly called here the "Venerable Archbishop of New York."

The church was packed with worshippers, the congregation comprising many noted personalities among the clergy and laity of Rome. The monks of the order of the Dominicans, who are in charge of the church, clad in their white robes, added picturesqueness to the scene.

Civil Service Commission.

Ottawa, Dec. 26.—The commission appointed last week to investigate the civil service will meet in Ottawa next Wednesday, according to present plans, as announced by Premier Borden. R. S. Lake is already here and will be joined by Mr. Ducharme of Montreal and A. B. Morine of Toronto. Mr. Morine will be the chairman of the commission. The selection of counsel for the commission has not yet been considered, but will be taken up at once.

Reyes Has Been Captured.

Laredo, Tex., Dec. 26.—According to a private telegram received here bearing the signature of Gen. Geronimo Trevino, Mexican military commander, Gen. Reyes has been taken prisoner. Reyes, according to the telegram, surrendered after his forces had been defeated by federal troops near Linares yesterday.

Kidney Pains in the Back

Could Not Stand or Even Turn in Bed —Legs Greatly Swollen

All Doctor's Medicine Failed—Cure Effected by Use of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Again this great medicine has triumphed over kidney disease of a severe type. From a bed of suffering and helplessness Mrs. Walsh was restored to health and strength by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Kidney pains in the back tortured her. Dropsical swellings had set in and she had no reason to hope for cure since the doctor's medicine failed to even relieve her. Read what the husband says about this remarkable cure.

Mr. Thos. D. Walsh, Pictou, N.S., writes: "Two years ago my wife took to her bed after suffering for a long time from kidney pains in the back. She was not able to stand on her feet or even turn herself in bed. The doctor's medicine was no benefit whatever, that we could see. Sometimes her legs would swell considerably. Reading about a woman in similar condition being cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, we purchased two boxes, ad when these were used she was able to sit up. With three more boxes she was restored to health and doing her own housework.

"As for myself I also found these pills all that is claimed for them. I give this statement in order that others may obtain the same ease from suffering as that experienced by my wife and myself."

BUYS FUEL AREAS.

Grand Trunk Purchases Big Property in Ohio.

Pittsburg, Dec. 26.—The Grand Trunk Railway Co. of Canada has just closed a deal whereby it obtains the holdings of the Rail and River Coal Co., with main offices here. The mines are located in Belmont County, Ohio. The deal includes 31,000 acres of coal lands and six producing mines, which have an output of 750,000 tons annually. The Grand Trunk Railroad contemplates operating the mines and using the output on its lines. The price approximates $3,000,000.

Many obstacles had to be overcome before the transaction could be completed. The closing of the deal was hastened by the proposed merger of 46 rival mining companies in Belmont and Jefferson Counties, Ohio. M. Liseman & Co. of New York have underwritten the stock for the merger, which represent $30,000,000 in capital, to be subscribed by London and Amsterdam capitalists. All the stock will be controlled by European interests.

It is said that Dan R. Hanna of Cleveland, Ohio, has agreed to dispose of his large holdings to the new syndicate. The capacity of the mines which it is proposed to consolidate is 13,000,000 tons annually.

The coal lands purchased by the G.T.R. are all in the No. 8 Pittsburg seam, which has been shipped heavily to the lakes the past few years. It makes excellent fuel for railroad purposes and is superior to any other grade of coal on the market.

Not Fully Confirmed.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 26.—Officials of two big Columbus coal companies, who are among the largest operators in the Belmont County coal fields, yesterday denied any connection with the sale of coal land in the Belmont County field for the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.

It was stated here, however, that the Grand Trunk had absorbed the Rail & River Coal Co. of Pittsburg.

The Rail & River Co. was capitalized at $2,500,000, with $2,500,000 in bonds outstanding. The Grand Trunk is understood to have paid $3,000,000 for the stock and guaranteed the bonds.

According to Pittsburg operators, the Grand Trunk purchase is the first step toward a consolidation that will represent an investment of $30,000,000 in Belmont County coal property, and control an annual output of 13,000,000 tons.

Condemned Hold Jollification.

Chicago, Dec. 26.—Seventy-seven murderers, with 600 other prisoners, partook of Christmas dinner and exchanged yuletide greetings at the Cook County jail yesterday. In many respects the holiday was the most unusual in the tragedy-laden history of the institution.

Ewald Shiblawski, one of the four murderers sentenced to hang Feb. 16 next, delivered a terse temperance lecture to a group of prisoners. He said:

"We had too much whisky in us when we did it. But for that Guelzow (a truck farmer whom they murdered) would be with his wife and children to-day. I wish I could bring him back."

Thomas Jennings, a negro sentenced to hang for the murder of Clarence Hiller, in the suburbs of Washington Heights, has turned preacher and yesterday had 15 negro prisoners praying on their knees. He also led a song service with the enthusiasm of a revivalist.

Mrs. Louise Vermilya, charged with several poisonings, said she had spent a cheerful Christmas in company with Mrs. Jane Quinn, who is charged with shooting her husband, John Quinn.

Riley Not Downcast.

Indianapolis, Ind., Dec. 26.—Twelve hundred letters of Christmas greeting and sympathy came yesterday to Jas. Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, who has been ill for several months.

"I can't answer them," said Mr. Riley, with a rueful glance at his right arm, of which he has lost the use. "I can't hold a pencil, I wish I could. But I am not so downcast as many of my friends seem to think. How could I be when I have so many well-wishers, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, whom I have never even seen. This is a merry Christmas for me, and I hope for all my unknown friends."

Some of the letters are in verse. One admirer advised that the poet learn to write with his left hand. "It is possible; I shall try this," said Mr. Riley, "but I fear it will be a tedious task."

Car Ferry Instead of Tunnel.

Charlottetown, P.E.I., Dec. 26.—Nominations take place for the Prince Edward Island general elections on Thursday of this week. The construction of a tunnel across the straits has long been a chief factor in the island's politics. A feature of the present campaign is that the Conservatives are now professing satisfaction with the proposal that instead of this a car ferry be established. The Charlottetown Guardian, which has hitherto been independent, is advocating the car ferry scheme.

Santa at the Mercer.

Toronto, Dec. 26.—Santa Claus in full regalia, with the regulation whiskers and girth, visited the Mercer Reformatory at Christmas dinner. The Christmas saint came in the person of Dr. King, surgeon of the institution, who distributed bon-bons to inmates and staff. His arrival was a great surprise, it being his first visit. It was the signal for great mirth and jollity. The afternoon was merrily spent listening to various offerings at an impromptu concert, gotten up by the inmates.

Over the Pacific Stormy.

San Francisco, Dec. 26.—Thirty-eight days from Tsingtau, China, the British bark Calcutta, arrived here Sunday, establishing a new record for the journey. Tempestuous weather was encountered and owls, falcons and hawks, driven off shore by the heavy gales, sought refuge in the rigging of the vessel.

Editorial Writer Dead.

Montreal, Dec. 26.—W. E. Hunt, editorial writer on The Montreal Witness, died yesterday at his residence on St Urbain street, of typhoid fever.

Mr. Hunt was born in England, but came to Canada some twenty years ago, and had spent almost a score of years on the staff of The Witness.

Duke is Delightful.

Ottawa, Dec. 26.—Christmas was spent quietly in the capital, the weather being against much outdoor enjoyment, being sloppy and mild. The churches were well attended.

At Rideau Hall H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught spent the season in old English style. Every employe was personally given the best wishes of the day by the Duke, who added something substantial to the handshake, the laborers got turkeys and wine, while others had money given to them, and higher officials stick pins with the Connaught monogram surmounted by the crest in precious stones.

His Royal Highness attended church twice during the day. Mr. R. L. Borden received many messages of goodwill by mail and wire, two being cables, one from Sir Joseph Ward and one from H. R. Fisher, Australian Premier.

Taken From Jail and Shot.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 26.—King Davis, a negro, aged 28 years, who last Saturday night shot and killed Frederick A. Schwab (white) at Fairfield, Anne Arundal County, was taken from the lock-up at Brooklyn, a suburb of Baltimore, at an early hour yesterday and shot to death by a small party of unknown men.

Davis, who was also known by the name of Johnson, was dragged to a spot about 200 yards from the station and shot through the lungs four times. His body was not discovered until several hours afterwards by a passerby who notified the police. No all-night guard is kept at the station, and the police had no knowledge of the affair until the finding of the body was reported. Chief Irwin at once started an investigation. Up to last evening he said he had no clue to the perpetrators of the deed.

Steamer Run Down.

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 26.—Driven many miles off her course by a strong northeast gale and while trying to find her way, the barkentine Mabel Myers, from Searsport, Maine, to Richmond, Va., collided with the Royal Mail steamer Orotava, bound from New York to Havana, about 75 miles off Cape Hatteras early Saturday morning, according to advices received here. Neither vessel sustained serious damage, and after a few hours' delay, proceeded on their way.

The Orotava's passengers, who were asleep when the accident happened, were badly frightened, and they were quieted with some difficulty by the officers of the vessels. The Myers had her railing torn away for about twenty feet and several plates on the Orotava were slightly dented.

Russia and Japan Friendly.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 26.—The first dinner of the new Russo-Japanese Society recently formed here, was held Saturday night at the Japanese embassy. Baron Ichero Motono, Japanese ambassador at St. Petersburg, and M. Kokovsow, the Russian Premier, exchanged toasts, both referring to the value of Russo-Japanese friendship.

Native May Rule Bengal.

London, Dec. 26.—A despatch to The Daily Mail from Calcutta gave the rumor that Sir Krishna Govinda Gupta, member of the India council, will be appointed governor of the new Province of Bengal. A native has never before held such an important post.

PETERBOROUGH TUESDAY DECEMBER 26 1911

HOLIDAY WAS QUIET

Absence of Snow and Ice Yesterday Did Not Please the Young People Though Day Was a Happy One

HOW IT WAS SPENT

Peterborough has seldom seen such a Christmas, in point of weather, as yesterday. The day was spring-like in nature, and the absence of snow and ice made it hard to realize that Christmas was here. The devotees of skating, tobogganing and hockey were in despair for there was no chance of indulging in those pastimes. Instead of the sound of the steel blades cutting into the frozen surface at Brock street rink, there was the whirr of the roller skate wheels over the hardwood floor.

It was a day of happy family reunions, however, in spite of the weather, and there was a notable influx of holiday visitors. Old boys and girls from all over the continent were home to share in the Yuletide festivities.

St. George's Society had a well-attended banquet and concert to commemorate the day. There were services in the morning in several of the city churches, and several had concerts last evening. At the Salvation Army Temple the usual Christmas entertainment was held.

There was a big time at the Children's Shelter. The people of Peterborough had liberally responded to the appeal from the newspapers for gifts for the children, and the six little folks had the time of their lives. Santa Claus visited the institution under the supervision of Agent George Cochrane, and distributed the gifts to the young people. There was plenty for everyone, and how the children enjoyed it all! The dinner was a feature that was thoroughly appreciated.

Large Influx Of Visitors

Holiday Passed off Without a Hitch—Visitors Departing For Their Homes

With the passing of Christmas, Peterborough is beginning to assume a normal condition. The city has been the "Mecca" for hundreds of holiday visitors during the past two or three days. On Saturday a vast concourse of people, of a cosmopolitan nature, ranging all the way from the market-gardener, who makes periodical visits to the city, to the friend or relative from Vancouver or some other distant point, invaded the city. Each incoming train was packed to overflowing, and the story of the struggles and vicissitudes of the throng as they surged about the railway stations during the arrival and departure of the trains would fill a volume.

The merchants reaped a bountiful harvest on Saturday, while the market and the local hotels also did a lucrative business. Upon enquiries authoritative sources it was learned that the influx of visitors was not an abnormal one. The falling off in the Saturday crowds being attributed to the unseasonable weather, although this latter solution applies only to the agricultural element.

The holiday passed off without a hitch; nothing out of the ordinary occurred to mar the day. A large number of visitors departed for their respective homes or places of occupation during the afternoon, and evening, and many more are following the same course to-day.

Premier Gives In

Special to The Examiner.

Pekin, Dec. 26.—Premier Yuan Shi Kai has agreed to submit to the Manchu dynasty proposition from the peace conference at Shanghai, that a national assembly be permitted to decide the question as to whether China shall be a republic or constitutional monarchy. In foreign quarters this is taken to indicate this morning that the Premier's influence will now go in favour of a republic for the national assembly will certainly vote that way.

Sixteen Drowned

Special to The Examiner.

Lisbon, Portugal, Dec. 26.—Captain James Benson and fifteen of the crew of the British steamer Guillemont, from London to Genoa, were drowned in the Bay of Biscay Christmas day after being knocked about in an open boat since Thursday, when their vessel foundered. Seven others of the crew on rafts and wreckage were picked up by passing vessels, two having died from starvation and exhaustion.

ALDERMAN BRADBURN IS MAYOR BY ACCLAMATION

Mr. J. J. Hartley Withdraws From the Contest---There is a Fight for the Council in Four Wards of the City With a Three-cornered Battle in the West Ward.

There will be no contest for the Mayoralty and ex-Ald. Wm. H. Bradburn will become Mayor of Peterborough for 1912 by acclamatiton. Although Mr. J. J. Hartley was nominated on Friday, and for a while it looked as if he would run, he decided on Saturday to withdraw from the contest and consequently did not make the necessary declaraion.

Mayor-elect Bradburn has had five years' service as alderman. At the elections last year he headed the polls in the Centre Ward and was consequently entitled to another year as alderman, but decided to resign and become a candidate for the Mayoraly. During the past year he has been chairman of the Finance committee, and with Mayor Morrow was a member of the special Power committee.

Although a number of those nominated for the Council on Friday did not qualify, there are enough left in the field to make a contest in four of the wards. In East City J. C. Anderson was returned by acclamation but there is a fight in each of the other divisions. In the South, Ald. Buller is seeking re-election and has as his opponent Mr. Has. Garside. Three others were nominated in this ward, but decided to withdraw.

There are two contests in the Centre Ward. For the regular term the two contestants are Ald. Metheral, chairman of the Board of Works and ex-Ald. Gillespie, who is back in the running again after a year as private citizen. There are two new men in the field for the vacancy caused by Ald. Bradburn's withdrawal. These are Mr. G. N. Gordon, barrister and Mr. W. G. Morrow, blacksmith.

There is a three-cornered fight in the West Ward, where ex-Ald. Jos. Duffus, Mr. H. C. Hill and Ald. Edgar will go to the polls. This should be one of the most interesting battles of the day.

In the North Ward Ald. Kerneghan has retired after a year's service on the council board, and ex-Ald. W. J. Johnston and Mr. William Langford, Jr., are the opposing candidataes.

With the Mayor, Water Commissioners and Board of Education elected by acclamation, the only ballots cast will be those for aldermen and in connection with the Hydro-Electric by-law.

ALD. BULLER ON THE HYDRO-ELECTRIC BY-LAW

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—Peterborough, with the water power in the city, should have electric power as cheap as any place in the Dominion.

This month a manufacturing company was written to from Peterborough regarding the location of their industry, and the reply was made that they had decided to locate in another city and that "the deciding factor in locating has been the low cost of electric power, coupled with the excellent shipping facilities." A further enquiry as to the cost there of electric power brought this reply:

"————, Dec. 18th, 1911.

"Dear Sir:—We are in receipt of your favour of the 14th inst., and we may say that the regular price of City and ———— Power Company are $1.500 per H.P. per annum.

"Yours truly,

"The Canadian Brakeshoe Company Limited.

"P. McCULLOUGH,
"President."

This city should take advantage of the services and authority of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission to obtain power that will be owned and controlled by the municipality for industrial purposes as well as for street and other lighting.

Yours truly,
W. BULLER.

CHRISTMAS SERVICES AT SACRED HEART CHURCH

The Christmas services at the Sacred Heart church were marked by the excellent choral music provided by the choir. In both solo and choral work the rendering was of an exceptionally high order. At the 5.30 and 10.30 mass, "Stearns" Mass in D, a splendid work, was executed in a brilliant manner, and the solos, duets and quartettes were effectively rendered by Miss Annie Simons (soprano), the Misses May Gordon and Alice Molloy (alto), Mr. P. Henshaw (tenor) and Messrs. Roma Picard and E. Bartley (bass). The offertory number was "Adeste Fideles," the solo being sung by Miss Annie Simons. The sacred song, "O Holy Night," sung by the same soloist, was rendered specially attractive by the violin obligato played by Mr. Vincent McCabe. The 5.30 mass was sung by the Rev. Dr. O'Brien and the 10.30 mass by the Rev. F. McCauley.

At the evening Vespers, Mr. Peter Henshaw sung "O Salutaris" in a sweet and devotional manner. Mr. J. Armstrong, the capable organist, is deserving of special mention for the care he exercised in the training of the choir.

The altar presented a magnificent floral aspect and myriads of lights encircled the crib. On either side of the tabernacle on the main altar were fixed brillian lights, forming the shape of a star.

Missionary Work Has Received Bad Set-back

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO DEC. 26.—Mail advices received here to-day from Canadian Methodist missionaries in China, indicate that there have been several murders of native helpers by revolutionaries who accuse all the native Christians of Imperialism, and take upon them revenge, which they dare not take from the foreign missionaries. Mr. and Mr. Alson of Canada, whose lives were despaired of for some time, have been located in an Imperial concentration camp. Owing to conditions in some of these concentration camps a number of Canadian missionaries' children have died. It is feared that mission work in China has received the worst set back in years.

Nominations In Douro

Following are the Douro nominations:

For Reeve—Frank Moher, acclamation.

TONS OF XMAS MAIL

Local Post Office Staff Had to Work Overtime to Ensure Delivery Yesterday Morning

ENGLISH MAIL IN

The staff of the local post office have every reason to remember the Christmas of 1911, as it was one of the busiest on record, in point of mail matter to be handled. From 12 o'clock, on Sunday night, the staff worked like heroes and early morning saw the enormous mail, including the big English budget, just arrived, all sorted, and the carriers on their rounds. The result was that Peterborough people had a host of pleasant surprises on Christmas morning, especially those from the Old Land, who were waiting anxiously for the English mail. It took a lot of hard work on the part of Postmaster Stratton and his assistants, to accomplish this feat.

A rough estimate, said Mr. A. H. Stratton, might place the increase of mail, over last Christmas season, at twenty-five per cent. Each letter carrier was provided with a horse and vehicle for the day. Each also had a helper, and some of those with heavy routes, two helpers. Mr. Stratton was very pleased with the manner in which the men carried out their duties, and eulogised them in the statement that many of them were working from 12 o'clock, midnight, and that every single parcel in the post office received up till noon on Christmas Day, was delivered.

Russians Are Taking Revenge

Special to The Examiner.

TABRIZ, PERSIA, DEC. 26.—Russians are still taking their fearful revenge. All morning they swept the streets with artillery, mowing down anybody who dared show himself. The commander of the Russians has refused to accept the suggestions of truce or show any respect for the white flag sent out by the governor.

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 26.—A new religious sect has appeared in Cornwall county. Men are burning their clothing in fields and saying long prayers and cutting their throats with sharp knives. Portions of the county are in terror. Twenty have been arrested and four suicided. They call themselves 'Order of the Soul.'

He Fell And Broke His Ribs

Special to The Examiner.

HAVELOCK, DEC. 26.—Mr. Leonard Keene of Belmont, while in the Village on Saturday, happened with an unfortunate accident by falling on the slippery walk and fracturing two of his ribs.

Information Is Wanted

Chief Thompson is in receipt of the following letter, which is self explanatory. Any information will be gratefully received by the Chief. Chief of Police, Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Kindly oblige by ascertaining where Mrs. Wm. Stewart, a widow lady, resides in your city. Her husband, when alive, was in the employ of Mr. George Matthews. The lady has two boys. She is a small woman, dark complexion. Her hair is probably grey now. It is some time since we met last, and at that time she was living down on lower George St., in a brick two-storey house. I have been greatly worried about her where abouts, and you will do me a great kindness if you can locate her, and send me her address as soon as possible.

Yours respectfully,
Miss Florence Seymour.

FORTUNE TELLERS ARE FINED $60 BY COURT

Magistrate Dumble Read Prisoners a Severe Lesson on the Impropriety of Their Conduct---Other Cases in the Court This Morning.

Ralph Costello and Harry Blanchard were this morning fined $60 and costs, amounting in all to $66, for telling fortunes. Costello stated that he had no money, but Blanchard said he would pay $66, so they were allowed to go. These two men were arraigned in police court on Friday last, charged with fortune telling They were proven guilty and remanded for sentence until to-day. The Magistrate had very little sympathy for them, when passing sentence this morning. He told them that their very art was swindling money from people, who were foolish enough to be led into it, and their books showed that they had been very successful in the city and also in other cities and towns where they had been. He pointed out that their trade was strictly prohibited by the law, and one which was simply cheating the people and he felt that it mattered little whether they told the truth in their predictions or not in this case. As a matter of fact, evidence showed that, in the majority of cases, they had not.

Owen Baker was charged with being drunk. "Hoary headed old fool," commented the Magistrate as he imposed the nominal fine of $2 with ten days in which to pay it.

Edward Johnston awa arraigned on a charge of drunk and disorderly and was fined $5.75. Johnston looked very much like an Indian, but claimed to be a white man. "Are you an Indian?" asked the Magistratae. "No." said the accused. "Where is your home?" "I have no home." "Where were you born?" "In Canada, but I don't know where," innocently answered the "would-be white." Further questioned he said that he had no tribe, but used to live near New Credit, up west. The Dominion Constable Indian Chief from Chemong was present and stated that the accused was not a tribal Indian, so he was allowed to go with the usual fine.

TRPLE ALLIANCE MAY NOW BE DISSOLVED

Examiner Special:

London, Eng., Dec. 26.—Probably the most important international negotiations in recent years are taking place in Rome to-day, where there have been several communications recently regarding Italy stepping out of the famous triple alliance of Germany, Italy and Austria, which was formed in 1879 and continued indefinitely to the great protection of each of these countries, and to the worry of other great powers of Europe. Germany and Austria are both said to be much at variance with Italy regarding the Tripoli campaign and think there should be an immediate cessation of hostilities. If the triple alliance between these nations breaks up, then the entente cordiale between Britain, Russia and France will be without a competitor for the supremacy of the world.

SANTA CLAUS CONCERT AT SALVATION ARMY

The Salvation Army Temple, on Simcoe street, was packed to the doors last night with a most enthusiastic and appreciative audience, the occasion being the annual children's concert and 'Santa Claus.' The programme was of an exceptionally interesting character, and comprised recitations, dialogues, drills and vocal and instrumental selections. The Boys' Band also played several very creditable numbers, under the leadership of Bandsman Walter Northcott.

A very pleasing item (not on the programme) was the presentation of a beautiful set of brushes and a pocket wallet to Mr. R. C. Braund, the U. S. Sergeant-Major, by the teachers of the Sunday school. An address was read by Mrs. Ensign Merrett, and the presentation was made by Mrs. Robt. Routly. Mr. Braund in a very neat reply, expressed his appreciation of this valued and unexpected token of esteem from his fellow workers, and assured all present of his firm intention of doing even more in the future for the benefit of the children than he had done in his many past past years of faithful service.

As previously announced, 'Santa Claus' arrived on the platform in a very novel style of an aeroplane, making the journey over the heads of the audience from the front of the building. The aeroplane was very prettily decorated with coloured paper and lighted by electricity and travelled along as gracefully as a bird. The idea certainly 'caught on' with the crowd, as was evidenced by the hearty reception given when Santa Claus stood up in his most up-to-date vehicle of transit and greeted the audience. During the progress of the programme, mock telegrams were received from a ticker on the platform, informing the children of the imaginary progress of Santa's aeroplane, each message being greeted by hearty applause. A large number of appropriate presents were distributed by Santa and his helpers and a candy bag for the children as well.

During the evening Mr. R. C Braund made a few remarks, in which he said that very often persons in his position as leaders, were blamed for many things for which they were not responsible, while at other times they received credit for which they had done nothing. As this was the case in connection with the evening's programme, he wished publicly to thank Mr. Fred Merrett, upon whose shoulders the major part of the work had fallen, as well as Messrs. Thos. Yost and Fred Gray, senior and junior, who had so ably assisted in building Santa's aeroplane and with the work in general.

The evening's proceedings were successful beyond the most sanguine expectation, the concert being pronounced the best held in the S. A. Temple here for many years.

MR. HARTLEY EXPLAINS

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Will you be good enough to allow me space to thank my friends for their kindness in nominating me on Friday last for the position of Mayor of Peterborough for 1912, and at the same time to express my appreciation to the many electors who volunteered and promised their support and influence. When first aproached to contest the mayoralty, I felt disposed to consent to the wishes of the deputations and felt that I might be able, if elected, to give the necessary time to the position, but on second consideration I felt that so much time would be required of me and so much night work that I had better for this year, at least, give up the idea of contesting the position, and, as a consequence, I did not qualify on Saturday evening. I, however, appreciate most heartily the honour done me, and at the same time I regret the circumstances that prevent my accepting the nomination.

Wishing all citizens the season's greetings, and many happy New Years, I am.

Yours truly,
J. J. Hartley.

SUSTAINED BROKEN ARM

Mrs. M. J. Dunford of 240 Rubidge street was the victim of a painful accident last evening. She was proceeding along Rubidge street and when between Sherbrooke and King streets she slipped on the sidewalk and fell on her arm. The injured lady was attended by Dr. McCullough and it was discovered that she had sustained a broken arm. On enquiry this morning, however, it is ascertained that she is progressing favourably.

5 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Cameron, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

A SUDDEN DEATH

Mr. S. W. Lowry, Formerly of Peterborough, is Found Dead Near Pocahontas, Alberta, on Saturday

SHOCK TO HIS FRIENDS

A telegram to Chief Thompson brought the sad news of the very sudden death on Saturday, Dec. 23, of S. W. Lowry, aged about 45, a former resident of this city, who left for Winnipeg, a year ago last August.

The late Mr. Lowry came here from Warsaw a few years ago, and was a member of the Scarlet Chapter of the Orange Order, Lodge No. 50. He was very much interested in astronomy, and was a popular member of the Peterborough Branch of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada. He left for the West about a year ago last August, where he was engaged as a carpenter for the Grand Trunk Pacific, and later for the Jasper Park Colliery, for which company he was working when he dropped dead. It has been learned that the deceased was suffering from heart trouble prior to his death, and it is to heart failure that his sudden demise is attributed.

The deceased is mourned by two sisters and three brothers. The sisters are Mrs. Geo. Clements, Warsaw; Mrs. Alex. Calder, 587 George street, city. The brothers are:: Mr. T. J. Lowry, Highland Grove, Mr. R. Lowry, city; Mr. W. J. Lowry, of Montreal.

The telegram to Chief Thompson was from the R. N. W. M. P., headquarters at Edson, Alta., and requested information re the relatives of the deceased and as to the disposal of the remains. It also stated that the late Mr. Lowry's remains were found near Pocatottas, Alta.

The news of the death of Mr. Lowry came as a terrible shock to his friends here, one of which stated to the Examiner that he had received a letter from the deceased this morning.

The Examiner only this morning received a letter from Mr. Lowry, asking that the address on his paper be changed and giving some interesting particulars in regard to his work in Alberta.

MR. HARTLEY RETIRES.

Mr. J. J. Hartley, who was nominated to contest the mayoralty, has retired. His reasons for this step are of a domestic and business character. His family objected to the great demands for night work, that would be made upon his time, if elected, and his business required personal attention that was incompetable with a faithful discharge of the duties of the mayoralty. He had been urged by his friends to enter the field, but when he had thought the matter over, though assured of strong support, he felt that in his own interests he could not be a candidate, and he did not qualify, as required by law, and consequently his retirement, left Mr. W. H. Bradburn elected by acclamation. Mr. Hartley's friends regret his decision, for if they had known of it sooner they would have selected another candidate.

THE BANK OF OTTAWA.

The 37th annual report of the Bank of Ottawa, submitted at the annual meeting of the 20th of December, was a very satisfactory one. The net profits for the year amounted to $595,-236, an increase of $63,000 over the earnings of the previous year. With the balance at credit of profit and loss account of $117,000 brought forward from the previous year there was a total of $713,167 available for distribution. This has been apportioned as follows: Quarterly dividend requirements at 2 3-4 p.c., absorbed $385,000, the sum of $100,000 was applied in reduction of bank premises account, $100,000 carried forward to rest account, and $10,000 to the officers' pension fund, leaving a balance carried forward at credit of profit and loss account of $118,167. The paid up capital of the bank amounts to $3,500,-000, while the bank's rest account now stands at $4,000,000, showing the bank to be in an exceedingly strong position.

A further examination of the bank's report shows that the note circulation increased by nearly $300,000 and the total deposits by nearly $2,500,-000, while the total assets increased by $3,000,000 and now stand at $46,-456,000. The bank is exceptionally strong in specie, Dominion notes and other quickly available assets, these amounting to $13,400,000.

The bank has adopted the somewhat unusual procedure of having a competent firm of chartered accountants, Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co., examine the books and accounts of the bank. This is in addition to the usual inspection which is carried on by the bank itself. The chartered accountants' report, which is submitted elsewhere, is a satisfactory one and furnishes the shareholders with additional proof that the affairs of the bank are being carefully and conservatively conducted.

THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The Borden Government has appointed three commissioners to enquire into the working of the various departments of the public service, apparently outside as well as inside, of the Dominion. The members of it are Mr. A. B. Morine, a Toronto lawyer; Mr. G. H. Becharme, a Montreal business man; and Mr. R. S. Lake, of Qu-Appelle, a former member of the House of Commons.

Following the common, but far from commendable practice, of talking to the newspapers, Mr. Morine has already been telling the public some of his ideas regarding the projected investigation. It is to be extensive, protracted, varied, and gloriously indefinite. It will certainly last a year, and probably a great deal longer, As all the public service of the Dominion, with its enormous ramifications, is to be brought under the microscope, and as the enquiry is to be thorough, it should take half a dozen years to complete it, as Mr. Morine foreshadows its scope and subject matter. That is an excellent prospect for the Commissioners from the standpoint of remuneration.

Only lapse of time and the actual proceedings of the Commission can make clear what it is really meant to accomplish. The only thing certain about it is that, whether the Commissioners favour this use of their work or not, they will be made to serve as a fishing party to start up scandals likely to be useful for election purposes. They are welcome to all the prestige they will ever make in this way. The public will never read the evidence; Conservative partisans will accept the testimony as trustworthy;; Liberal partisans will characterize it as "fishy." The plan will fall flat, as it deserves to do.

It is proper to note here that the Laurier Government issued a commission of inquiry to investigate the Department of Marine and Fisheries but the record to be scrutinized then was the Government's, not that of political opponents, and the outcome was a statute creating a civil service commission to replace ordinary party patronage. We shall see whether a like self-denying ordinance will result from the present section.—Guelph Mercury.

Weak Point In Power By-law Spend Big Money Without Consent

Mr. William Langford's name appears attached to a letter in Saturday's Examiner, in reference to the blind by-law, in regard to power.

Mr. Langford is generally a man of sound judgment, and healthy opinion—when he is speaking his own mind.

He places himself in a false position when he allows his name to be attached to statements that are palpably misleading to the ratepayers.

In a matter that concerns the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and a huge addition to the debt of the city, the City Council should treat the ratepayers, who have to bear the burden, openly, and fairly—give the facts, not misleading suggestions.

Mr. Langford is made to say "that the opponents of municipal electric power are trying to raise a bug-a-boo on the point that a favourable vote on the Hydro-Electric question, on Jan. 1st, will give the Council power to enter into a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission, either next year, or some succeeding year".

Mr. Langford says, or is made to say, that in case of a favourable vote, a by-law must be submitted to, and approved, by the people before money can be borrowed FOR THE DISTRIBUTION SYSTEM AND OTHER PLANT".

Here is where Mr. Langford is made to state a half-truth, whose effect is to mislead the electors.

There is no shadow of doubt that a vote of "yes" on the power question by-law will empower the City Council to enter into a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission, and that WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF THE PEOPLE—that's Hydro-Electric law.

This means that in case the people vote "yes," the City Council can enter into a contract to develop power—this, too, is electric law—and the ratepayers will have to bear the expense without being consulted.

What will be the expense? The Council doesn't tell that. The Hydro-Electric's own estimate is that it costs $110 per horse power to develop.

Suppose the city enters into a contract with the Commission to develop, say, 5000 horse power at No. 4 and 5, or No. 8 dams. That will mean $550,000 for this amount of power.

This expenditure can be made without submitting the question to the vote of the people.

Mr. Langford may be right in saying that the by-law for the transforming system and transmission lines would be submitted to the people.

And it would likely be carried. The people would reason that after the Council had "stuck them" lars, for development purposes, for over half a million dollwhich would be useless without power was transmitted, would probably say that they should not see the half-million wasted, and might vote for the transmission lines in sheer self defence.

What would be thus extra expense the people would have to vote on?

We can only estimate by analogy. Without paying a cent for power development, Toronto has spent already 2 1-2 million dollars on transforming and transmission; two millions more are demanded, and a million more will be needed.

Toronto's population is about 17 times greater than that of Peterborough.

If it costs Toronto five millions for transforming and transmission it would cost Peterborough one-seventeenth of five millions, which is about $290,000.

Add this to the $550,000, which the City Council would have to spend at the Hydro figures, to develop 5000 horse power (which they can do without asking the people) and we have a total of $850,-000.

This is an estimate, based on Hydro figures, and Toronto's experience, for 5,000 horse power, and will vary as to development cost with the amount developed.

It is something of a guide, which is more than the City Council is, in submitting the by-law.

If we should get 5000 horse power what should we do with it? There no demand in sight for industries. We don't need it for lighting the city. We have a five-year contract with an absolute guarantee that if the contract is renewed there will be no advance in price, the rates, by special provision being in the hands of the Railway and Municipal Board.

We shall have to pay the cost of this 5000 horse power whether we use it or not.

We shall have to pay the cost of development any way, whether we use a watt of power or not.

We can get 3000 horse power from the Seymour Power Company at from $18 to $20 per horse power, and only pay for what we get, and that without adding one cent to the indebtedness of the city.

Why doesn't the City Council tell the people what expense will be incurred—give them some idea of what power will cost?

Why doesn't the City Council provide in the by-law a guarantee that in respect of whatever contract is made with the Hydro-Electric the people will have a chance to approve or disapprove by their votes?

This is not done in the present by-law. If the people vote "yes" they give a City Council power to spend any amount of money they may see fit to develop power without asking the consent of the people, who must pay.

If the people vote "yes" they are giving a blank cheque, to be filled in with any amount the Council may see fit.

The point is not the merits, or demerits of the Hydro-Electric power scheme; the point is, that by submitting a blind by-law the City Council is asking the people to give them permission to spend any amount to develop power without the consent of the ratepayers.

Why didn't they put a clause in the by-law to this effect: that the people would have a chance to pronounce on a development contract?

They consult the people by the blind by-law on a question that they need no approval of the people upon.

But upon the crucial point the unlimited power to spend the people's money without their consent, they don't consult the people.

Every ratepayer would vote for the by-law if the by-law provided that the people should be consulted on the expenditure that will be made if the people vote "yes".

IS HEAVEN A PLACE OR STATE OF CHARACTER?

This is a question whose alternative answer should interest everybody, but judging from the actions of manhood, generally, there is a general indifference to the character of the eternal future that confronts all men. But that there are many that take an interest in this question was shown by the large audicence that filled St. Luke's on Sunday night, to listen to the last of a series of sermons; on the subject of "Heaven," delivered by the Rector, Rev. F. J. Sawers, under whose ministrations the congregations are growing and active interest in church affairs very sensibly increasing. The church was bright in its Christmas garb of greenery, and the service was of a character attuned to the joyous Christmas note.

The sermon was simple and direct, marked by quiet earnestness of logical appeal. To those who regard the subject of Heaven as a matter of purely speculative conjecture, the preacher showed that the symbolism employed in Holy Scripture, especially in the Revelation of St. John the Divine, to indicate the nature of the future state of happiness was underlaid by deep meaning, whose general character could not be misunderstood. The golden floor of heaven as a symbol of purity, showed that nothing impure could enter Heaven; the white robed, countless throng that had become purified, and had come up through great tribulation, showed that successful contest with the forces of sin in this world, had its abundant reward in unspeakable joys, and so with all the other forms of symbolism employed. We knew from explicit statement that there would be no more sorrow, suffering, nor sin in Heaven. It was a state of character, rather than a place, and the only barrier to entrance to heaven, was sin—unrepented sin; sin wilfully persisted in to the end. The man who, in face of the light, persisted in such a course, would be shutting the door of heaven in his own face. The remedy for sin, the redemption provided, was suggested by the season of Christmas, when, as at that time, Christ came into the world to save the people from their sins, and to help, and be the sole instrument in forming characters that would fit mankind for entrance into the paradise of God.

The sermon was happily delivered and was a message of comfort and cheer, such as is needed in a world of trial and struggle against the adverse conditions that tend to divert our minds from higher ambitions and our steps from the right path.

CENTRE WARD

A business man is needed to see that the City's money is properly expended. It means cheaper power for the factory and cheaper lights for the home.

Card From

Ex-Alderman Gillespie

Core Ward

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough.

Ladies and Gentlemen—

Having been again urged by a large number of ratepayers interested in the welfare of the city, I have consented to accept the nomination for Alderman for 1912.

My previous record in the Council is known to you all. If again honoured with your confidence I will endeavour to render such efficient service as will conduce to the best interests of the city irrespective of wards or boundaries.

As my business engagements will not permit me to personally interview the electors, I take this means of solicit your votes and influence.

Yours respectfully,

Geo. A. Gillespie

Dec. 24, 1911.

Johnston

For North Ward

After an absence of three years from the council, I again present myself as a candidate for aldermanic honours. If elected I will serve the city to the best of my ability. There are important matters before the people, and with my previous experience I will be in a position to give these questions good intelligent consideration. Wishing the electors a Happy New Year. 5d-148

MORROW

For Centre Ward

For the first time I present myself as a Candidate for election to the Council of the city.

I hope to receive measure of support such as is freely accorded a new man, and new candidate.

If elected I will serve the city just as faithfully and as well as I can, never forgetting what is best for it and its people.

Time will not permit of a personal canvass, but I ask for support.

Yours Respectfully,

5d-148 Ladies & Gentlemen.

VOTE TO RE-ELECT JOS. R. METHERAL

in CENTRE WARD

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

I have been entrusted with your confidence for the past three years and my record stands open before you. It may show no extraordinary ability, but an endeavour to be straight-forward and honest in all dealing. I have not been swayed by cliques or outside influences, but voted and worked at all times in the interests of the ratepayers in general and will continue to do so in the future, if re-elected. I would advise the electors to vote for the Hydro-Electric Commission Power By-law. I firmly believe that the Hydro-Electric Commission will give Peterborough power at rates considerably reduced from those at present in force, but I pledge myself that no contract for power either with the Hydro-Electric Commission or private corporation shall be signed by the City Council without a By-law to that effect being submitted to the ratepayers.

Wishing you all the Compliments of the Season.

CARD OF THANKS

TO THE RATEPAYERS:

Ladies and Gentlemen,

By the retirement of Mr. J. J. Hartley, who had entered the field for the Mayoralty my election follows as if by acclamation.

I desire to thank the many friends who came forward and proffered support, and I esteem such offers fully as much as if rendered.

As Mayor of the City I will earnestly strive to assist in managing the affairs of the municipality that best results may come.

I outlined in my address certain measures and work which I feel will be for the benefit of the city and so far as I can will urge forward these propositions.

Looking for a progressive and prosperous year in Peterborough and wishing all the compliments of the season.

G. N. GORDON

FOR ALDERMAN

CENTRE WARD

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CENTRE WARD.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

As a candidate for Alderman for one of the two seats in the Centre Ward I respectfully solicit your votes.

My platform is briefly this:

1. Obtain Hydro-Electric estimates and reports as to prices, terms, etc., of obtaining power for the city's manufacturers, and for house and store lighting.

2. Abate the nuisance caused by the G. T.R. using Bethune St. as a shunting yard, which injuriously affects hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of realty.

3. Obtain legislation allowing reduction of taxes on businesses and improvements and increasing taxation of land values, thus making the holders of vacant land pay their share of taxes.

4. Have every milk-vendor's milk inspected at least fortnightly and a report with the milkman's name published, showing the proportions of butter fat contained in each lot.

5. Consideration of the question of permanent improvement of highways.

6. Begin an aggressive campaign to obtain new industries and inaugurate a strong publicity scheme.

There are two Aldermen to be elected for the Centre Ward. G. A. Gillespie is contesting one seat with J. R. Metheral, and W. G. Morrow, of Charlotte St., is contesting the other seat with me.

If elected, I will energetically support a progressive campaign for the city's advancement.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I am, yours faithfully,

UNIFORM MARRIAGE LAW IN CANADA IS A NECESSITY SAYS REV. W. C. RIDDIFORD

Pastor of Park St. Baptist Church Discusses the Ne Temere Decree in a Special Sermon.

IN ANSWER TO QUESTION

At the Park Street Baptist church on Sunday night, Rev. W. C. Riddiford continued his series of special sermons on "Some Questions the People are Asking". His subject on Sunday night was "Is a Uniform Marriage Law Necessary in Canada?" There was a large congregation in attendance.

Rev. Mr. Riddiford chose as his text: Romans 12. 18—"If you can, so far as it depends on you, live at peace with all the world". Dr. Weymouth, in his New Testament in modern speech. The authorized Bible reads: "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men," and I suppose Paul meant that for the women folks, too. There was no Ne Temere decree in Paul's day, and I am sure Peter did not know anything about it. The first pope was married. Now, I desire to help on the work of peace. We cannot afford to have so many unpeaceful microbes coursing through the blood of this growing nation. The foundation must be laid now, or the superstructure will topple to the ground. I want to come to you tonight, with a message of peace, and I desire to try and answer this question put into my box, and signed 'R. C.' in a kind, frank, and yet, fearless way. No man should be ashamed of his religion. Roman Catholics have many good traits of character. In a good many things they put Protestants to shame. I have no quarrel with my Roman Catholic friends, as citizens and neighbours; but I must frankly confess that there are many of their religious teachings that I cannot accept as founded upon the word of God. I shall not mention them now, but we shall take up a study of some of Rome's doctrines on January 14th, when my friend and brother, Rev. Patrick Morgan, late of the Capuchin Fathers, will be with us, for a special mission.

To the question "Is a uniform marriage law in Canada a necessity? I say, in view of the trouble, which has undoubtedly arisen, among many homes, and the untold misery it will surely cause in the future, if allowed to promulgate in our midst. I say yes, let us have a uniform marriage law for our fair Dominion, and a law so simple in regard to getting married, and the marriage state, that he who runs may read and understand. That there is a diversity of opinion even among the learned Judges of our land is very apparent to any right-thinking and observant man. Peace can only be restored when there shall be one law to govern the marriage question in all our provinces, and until that is brought about I believe it to be the duty of all, in the other eight provinces of Canada, regardless of their religion, to see that Quebec is liberated from the thraldom of the Ne Temere decree. Just by way of illustration, let me give you a few indisputable facts related to me by Rev. A. L. Therrien, D. D., President of our Baptist Convention, upon the marriage law situation in the Province of Quebec:

He says, in 1873, I was pastor of the French Baptist Church of St. Pie, Bagot County; a man by the name of Vigneux came to solicit my services to unite him in marriage with his late wife's sister. They were from St. Hyacinthe, and declared that the Bishop refused to give his permission to their union unless Vigneux paid for a dispensation costing two hundred dollars. He had his license, and on hearing his story, well authenticated by a man whose honesty I trusted, I performed the ceremony and sent them on their way rejoicing. The parish priest, from his pulpit, denounced him and his wife, as living in concubinage, and warned the people against dealing with him. He sued the priest for damages. The case was tried before the late Judge Sicotte of St. Hyacinthe, who maintained the validity of the marriage and condemned the priest to pay a fine of three hundred dollars and costs. In his charge the Judge was very severe, and, amongst other things, said it was time the Roman Catholic clergy of Quebec learned that a marriage ceremony, performed by a Protestant minister was just as valid before the law of the land, as when performed by a priest.

Not long after a similar case came before Judge Jette (later Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec). He declared the marriage illegal, and said it was time Protestant ministers learned they had no right to marry Roman Catholics.

Now, the question arises, how long will such juggling with our marriage laws be permitted, and how long will we allow Canada to be the laughing stock of the whole civilized world in this regard. How long, O Lord, how long are we to allow this unwise law to create bad feelings, destroy homes, and break down the national ties? Nationally, in Canada, there are no French, no Irish, no English, no Italian, etc., we are all British subjects of King George V., and as such it should be our endeavour to live peaceably together. This Ne Temere decree is destroying the peace of Canada. Its insidious claim, enforced upon Canadian citizens be they Roman Catholic, or Protestant, means national suicide to the ideals of Canada. Religious liberty we grant, and in no country in the world have our Roman Catholic friends more religious liberty than here, but while we grant to all religious liberty, regardless of their religious beliefs, we shall not allow any religious body, be it Roman Catholic, or Protestant, to usurp the rights of the State. Baptists have always believed and suffered for the principle of the separation of Church and State, and are prepared to suffer again. We want no established church in this country: neither do we want special privileges granted by the state to any religious body; nor municipal privileges. Rome's motto is "Semper idem—"always the same". She can claim that if she wishes; but I object to any government allowing her to come to Canada and stake out a claim to civil supremacy, in any one of our nine provinces, Quebec included, of course.

Our friend Sellar, has written a little book upon the tragedy of Quebec; but, in my opinion, the tragedy has not taken place yet, and will not take place until every Protestant and every fair-minded Roman Catholic, in the remaining eight provinces, march in solid column to the government of this Dominion, and demand the immediate enactment of a uniform marriage law for Canada, which will bring peace into the domestic circles of our fair Canadian homes, and remove forever this stigma, which is at present making Canada a reproach to the world. "As much as lieth in you, live at peace with all men".

We can tolerate purgatory, even though we do not believe in it. We can tolerate the auricular confession which, in my humble judgment, is one of the greatest humbugs put forth in the name of religion. I may be wrong, and undoubtedly my Roman Catholic friends will say the same of the church of my choice. It is their privilege. Speech is free. We grant the members of the Roman Catholic Church the privilege of worshipping God as they please, and of discussing the merits of all other religions. The study of comparative religions is an interesting study, when compared in the light of the effect certain religions have on the countries in which they have had full sway. All this we grant. But, when it comes down to interfering with the State, I say "hands off". Just as Germany and other places have said regarding this Ne Temere decree. The Catholic Record attempts a defence of the Ne Temere decree. It insists upon the right of the Pope to exercise control over the civil power with regard to this question. At least that is what I understand from this quotation, clipped from the Record:

"Leo XIII. teaches that Christ entrusted to the church the entire control over Christian marriage. 'These powers were her's, not from the State, but from her Divine Founder.'" Although Leo XIII teaches that Christ entrusted to the church the entire control of Christian marriage, he does not say that the State has nothing to do with marriage. On the contrary, he insists that the church does not wish to interfere with the civil consequences of marriage. Three facts, it seems to me, are here presented::

(1) The Roman Catholic Church has entire control of the marriage question.

(2) The State has a little to do with it.

(3) That little, the State has to do, she must get from the Roman Catholic church.

I think that is a fair deduction to take from the Record's remarks.

Now, that claim of civil supremacy in the marriage law, or any other law, is the very thing Protestants, or, at least, Baptists, protest against.

Christ is the Head of the Church. King George V., the head of the State. Therefore, the State, and not the Pope, has the supreme authority on the question of marriage, and, believing this to be the prerogative of the State, the Protestant ministers of this Dominion claim the privilege of marrying any who are fit subjects, to enter that sacred union, so long as they present a license with the signature of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province.

Rome has no special claim in this matter. "The proclamation of the Ne Temere decree, says Rev. E. Bosworth, in his report to the Grand Ligne Board of our Convention, by which the Curia or Council of Cardinals in Rome (almost all of whom are Italians, who know nothing of Canadian home life, especially married life, and its ideals) these Cardinals have undertaken to determine what shall govern this Dominion, in the most tender and intimate relations of life, and, in so doing, incidentally to assert the claims of the Pope to control, independent of, and if need be, in opposition to, the laws of the state." And the following quotation from the decree proves the truth of Mr. Bosworth's words. Listen to these words from his Civil Majesty, the Pope—"I decree that this form is necessary for Catholics among themselves, and for Catholics who marry non-Catholics. I decree every other form, whether approved by the State, or by schismatical, or heretical sects, to be invalid. I further decree that every such form is as worthless as a form invented by the parties themselves, and useless, as if no form whatever were observed. Further, any who disobey this law are declared to be living in concubinage, and not in lawful wedlock. This means two things: "That whenever I marry a Roman Catholic young lady to a Protestant, I, as a Christian minister, because I do not belong to the Roman Catholic church, am abetting adultery. I repudiate such an insult to the Protestant ministry of this Dominion. And any government which would allow any church to make such a claim, and carry it over into the civil realm, without protest, are not the real representatives of the people."

The womanhood of this country should be protected from the slime of such mud-rake religion.

The time has come, yea, it is overdue, when a demand should be made upon the Dominion Government to enact such legislation that shall make it a crime to even insinuate that those who have fulfilled the civil conditions imposed by the Canadian Provinces are not living in lawful wedlock, because they have not conformed to the regulations of this foreign Pope and his Council of Cardinals. Italy will have none of this; why should Canada? Paul's advice is "As much as lieth in you, live at peace with all men." But there was no Ne Temere decree in Paul's day. We want peace, but not at the expense of principle and national decay. So I claim that a uniform marriage law is an absolute necessity in Canada.

First, because it would restore peace to the State and to its citizens.

Second, because it would protect the home and all it means from the inroads and workings of this infamous decree, as witnessed in the Hebert, McGee, McCann, Haney, Moore, and other cases.

Third, it would forever fix as the civic motive of Canada "Religious liberty to all and special privileges to none".

A Sunday Morning Visit to Charlotte St. Methodist Church

(By Roy Gilray.)

Hark! the herald-angels sing
"Glory to the new-born King,
Peace on earth, and mercy mild:
God and sinners reconciled."

These were the opening strains of the service at Charlotte street church last Sunday morning. How the people sang! Seldom have I heard congregational singing like it; and not all the trained singers are in the choir either. As I stood enraptured during the opening hymn and noticed some empty seats, due, no doubt, to the holiday season, I was trying to imagine how grand it would sound with the church well filled, and the choir with a full complement of choristers.

Though presenting an exterior quite unpretentious this church has an interior costly and comfortable. Carpeted throughout, one has no misgivings when he trusts his fine hat to the tender mercies of the floor. This reminds me of one church I visited recently—and a fashionable one, too—where I spent nearly two minutes trying to separate my hat from the dust that clung to it. The church is small, devoid of that barren look so characteristic of a larger edifice.

A church of great dimensions fills one with awe, and not infrequently some of its members create the same impression; but here, as if by instinct, one realizes that he is among a people possessing those finer qualities of nature or culture that generate little acts of kindness.

Kindness is never rough. Kindness is the very opposite of crudeness. If the heart be truly kind, tenderness will be seen in the countenance, in the eye, and in the facial expression.

To a stranger they are most courteous. Instead of gathering up their cloaks and withdrawing to a safe distance, as if from a convict, they draw near and extend the hand of fellowship.

If a new-comer to the city desires to serve his Master within their gates they do not freeze him if they think he possesses as many accomplishments as they profess; they do not give him the cold shoulder if he happens to come into their midst without a special invitation; and if he does come, perchance by invitation, their Christian spirit, (to say nothing of their good manners), prompts them to use him as a brother and not as an outcast.

It is a lamentable fact that some of the churches have lost that reputation so long cherished by Methodists; the heartiness of their greeting to a stranger. Many a man and woman have thanked God for the outstretched hand of the Methodist brotherhood. A revival of the old interest in humanity would speedily fill the empty pews.

As I looked around me and viewed the building my thoughts were of the great men who made this institution a possibility, yes, a living fact.

From what was in its origin a term of derision the word "Methodist" has become an honourable and accepted title of world-wide significance. It was originally a student's jibe on the group of Oxford scholars, who, headed by John and Charles Wesley, used in 1726 to meet together for spiritual communion. It was supposed to signify persons who lived by a "method." John Wesley accepted the term, and his followers for nearly two hundred years have been proud to bear the name.

Methodism began in a revival of personal religion, and it professed to have but one aim, viz., "to spread scriptural holiness over the land." Its doctrines were in no sense new, it was the zeal with which they were taught. Its outstanding characteristic is the fact that it is a personal religion, and as such, appeals to a special but widespread type of human temperament. For this reason Methodism is destined to be a permanent influence in the world.

One of the great men of Canada today, is Dr. Carman, Chief of the Methodist Church. He has many friends and some enemies—a sign of his greatness. He believes absolutely in himself, in the goodness of his motives, in the rightness of his views. He will admit of no gainsaying. He is a welcome relief from the vacillating type of man, the man of petty distinctions and fine hair-splitting. His friends eulogize him as "The Grand Old Man of Methodism" and 'the foes are those who would mutilate the scriptures." His enemies denounce him as "The Methodist Pope," "the modern heresy hunter." Those who merely look on, anxious to be entertained, listen, with amusement, to the whacks of his cane on the head of some unfortunate victim, and say "Well ,the old man is at it again. He'll keep the wicked in the straight and narrow way or put him out of the way altogether."

He came into prominence in 1874 when he was elected Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church. The union of the three Canadian branches of Methodism was brought about in 1883 with Dr. Carman as its first General Superintendent, which he has held ever since, a period of twenty-seven years. What he has he will hold till Death bids him let go. In these days when the modern young men not only push old men out of the way, but jump on them when they are down, it is refreshing to see this very old man whom no one can push aside or jump on, and who can, if necessary, perform these operations himself with great celerity and despatch. Latter day Biblical students stand out of the way of the Doctor, or he will blast them with his favourite quotation from John Wesley: "Philosophers, always the pests of religion."

It was a happy relief to find the pastor of this church in perfect harmony with his great Chief. I understand he is weak on Higher Criticism, but strong on conversions. Ever since Mr. Henderson assumed the pastorate he has been rewarded with tangible results each time he made the appeal on Decision Day, the first Sunday of each month, (with two exceptions), the number of converts ranging from two to seven each day.

As a result the church has made very substantial progress. The total increase has been about two hundred and forty during the three years, with a net increase of one hundred, sixty-five having been transferred to St. James' church when it was opened, and seventy-five having left the city. This splendid showing is but a proof that men are not all philosophers, and like sheep, they go where the pasture is good. Asking for food, they are not put off with a stone; seeking for truth, they are not fed on fiction, but are served with the bread of life.

The finances of the church are in a very healthy condition, as also is the work of the Sunday school, it being in excellent hands; in fact the entire organization is one that ought to make the heart of any pastor glad. No wonder, Rev. Mr. Henderson said in his annual greetings: "During a ministry of considerably over thirty years, it has never been my privilege to labour among a more appreciative people. To give one's self in service and devotion to such a congregation is a joy indeed."

The sermon was of the usual Christmas type, the text being taken from I Timothy, 3: 16, "Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in the flesh." The fac that there is a mystery in the incarnation, the birth of Christ, does not offend the intellect. Is there not mystery everywhere? Even in physiology the law of nutrition, the development of the body, though apparently very simple, is shrouded in mystery; while the life of the plant as it selects the elements of the soil, absorbing and assimilating them, is equally mysterious. Every blade of grass, every body that breathes the breath of life is pregnant with mystery about him. One than noted for his great learning said: "I speak with the utmost scientific precision when I say that I know more of the deity than of a grain of sand."

"The great mystery of godliness," the mystery of the incarnation, presents a chain of mysteries, one link being the two natures, the divine and the human. The deity of Christ is the soul of Christianity. Some assert that the Son of God was simply an ordinary creature, first in the rank of creation, but deny the deity. Quite recently a Toronto pulpit gave utterance to this heresy, which was received with seeming approval, but the reverend speaker left no room for compromise ;the acceptance of this teaching is the difference between life and death, if we are wrong then are we idolators.

"God manifest in the flesh." Those that ought to know believed that Christ was divine. Thomas exclaimed as he beheld the risen Christ: "My Lord and my God." Simon Peter answered and said: "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." John writes: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." Paul says: "Christ came, who is our all, God, blessed forever." Those disciples that were with him in the ship, worshipped him saying: "Of a truth thou art the Son of oGd." What led these men of fair intelligence to believe in their Master? For answer we turn to his great miracles.

These served a two-fold purpose. They not only relieved distress, showing sympathy and compassion, but were Christ's credentials, signs that he was the Son incarnate. These manifestations play a very important part in the unfolding of God's plans to man. For example, when Moses was commanded to go to the children of Israel, he desired a sign of the Lord, saying: "They will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice; for they will say, the Lord hath not appeared unto thee." Then God performed the miracle of changing the rod into a serpent, directing him to go and let it be a sign unto the children of Israel and to Pharoah that the Lord God was behind him. John the Baptist, while in prison, with faith wavering, sent his followers to Christ to ask: "Art thou he that should come or do we look for another?" In reply Jesus said: "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised up." He was constantly performing works that could be wrought by none other than God or the Son of God.

Above all Christ spoke with sincerity, and what he claimed his disciples accepted. He spoke as a lawgiver. "When Moses addressed his people he said: "Thus saith the Lord," but when Christ spoke it was: "I say unto you" To Mary he said: "I am the resurrection and the life," then raised Lazarus from the dead. The palsied man he comforted with the words: "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." God, only, can forgive sins. On this ground the Jews accused him of blasphemy. In conversation with the woman at the well concerning the Messiah, Christ said: "I that speak unto thee am he. "Pilate, during his examination of Jesus, asked him if he were the King of the Jews, and Christ's answer became the final charge upon which he was condemned to death. The disciples and early Christians accepted Him—so do we.

The incarnation is another unfathomable mystery. The birth, after the manner of men; the conception, sinless; born with a human nature not of the fallen state, but pure from the hand of God. As a babe in the manger he was helpless, undeveloped, ignorant; as a man he had the usual weakness; he suffered hunger, was weary, athirst; he had a heart of sympathy and loving compassion; as a son he was dutiful, obedient; as a citizen, law-abiding, rendering unto Caesar the things that were Caesar's.

To get any conception of the sacrifice made by Christ in forsaking his glory, we have to imagine our own beloved Queen Mary denying royalty, stepping down from the throne, and identifying herself with the meanest subject of the realm; yet Christ took on our infirmities all for humanity's sake.

"The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." No more can we interpret the incarnation than explain the relation of body and soul. Daniel

Webster, in company with several distinguished men, was asked by one who professed to be an atheist, to explain how Christ was both human and divine. Webster replied: "I cannot. If I could I would acknowledge that my Saviour was no better than I am. I need a mighty Saviour."

ENGLISHMEN GATHER ROUND FESTIVE BOARD

St. George's Society Celebrate Christmas With a Most Enjoyable Banquet and Concert.

A SUCCESSFUL EVENT

Those of the sons of the Mother country who otherwise would probably have had no place in which to spend their Christmas evening, enjoyed themselves thoroughly in the Sons of England Hall, where, under the auspices of the St. George's Society, a Christmas banquet and concert was held.

Immediately before the dinner, a photograph of the assembly, which at that time numbered about eighty, was taken by Roy. This attendance increased as the evening wore on. After the gathering had done full justice to a typical Christmas dinner, a splendid programme of music was rendered in the interval of which a draw for a picture took place. The prize was won by Mr. J. John, while the dummy prize fell to the lot of Mr. A. Francis. Mr. F. A. Dainton occupied the chair and the pianist for the evening was Mr. G. E. Palmer. Following are the musical items as rendered:

Part I.

Christmas Carol.
Song, "My Wife's Gone to the Country," Mr. G. E. Palmer.
Song, "For Old Times Sake," Mr. J. Harrison.
Song, "If I'd My Way," Mr. George.
Harmonic selection, Messrs. J. J. Shadgett and son.

MR. F. A. DAINTON,
Chairman of the St. George's Society Christmas Dinner Last Night.

Song, "Still I Breath," Mr. E. Thompson.
Song, "Monarch of the Deep," Mr. Dudley.
Mandolin solo, Mr. Hawke.
Song, selected, Mr. Greenslade.
Song, "The Holy City," Mr. C. J. Palmer.
Song, "The Fighting Man," Mr. Dudley.
Sonjurer, Mr. Carte.

Comic song, selected, Mr. E. Thompson.
Song, "Asleep in the Deep," Mr. C. J. Palmer.
Mandolin solo, Mr. Hawke.

Song, selected, Mr. George.
Recitation, selected, Mr. J. John.
Song, selected, Mr. Cooper.
Song, selected, Mr. A. Thompson.
"Auld Lang Syne."
God Save the King.

The childrens' Christmas tree and tea will be held in the Market Hall on Jan. 4th, when all the children of the Mother country are invited. It may here be mentioned that while the society commenced approximately a year ago with only six persons, it has a membership of upwards of two hundred and fifty, which speaks well for the work of the society.

Photographs of the banquet group may be obtained at 346 Aylmer street.

The Actress (disdainfully)—Twenty dollars a week! Why, whom do you think you're trying to engage?

Manager (of bush repertoire company)—Why—er—I beg your pardon madam, but which New York theatre is named after you?—Puck.

OBITUARY

MRS. JOSEPH LE GRANDER.

There passed away at early morning, on Sunday, the 24th, one of the city's best known residents, in the person of Mrs. Joseph Le Grander, of 136 Perry street.

The deceased, who had reached the age of 61 years, was born in La-Prairie, Que., but has been a resident of Peterborough for a great number of years. Her's was a long and painful illness and the end was, therefore, not wholly unexpected. Possesing a naturally charitable disposition, she was beloved of all those who were fortunate enough to know her, and leaves behind her a memory of stirling citizenship. The relatives have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

Mrs. LeGrander is survived by three sons, and eight daughters, namely, Messrs. Louis LeGrander of Detroit, Eddy of Montreal, Alrick of Toronto, Mrs. Keyes, City, Mrs. Roy, of Toronto, Mrs. Paquette, city; Mrs. Barrie, Toronto, the Misses Clara, Sophie, Dalphine and Leonora, all living at home. Seven brothers and three sisters also lament her demise, in the persons of Messrs. Frank and Thomas Desantel, of this city; Edmund, Benjamin and David, of Michigan, Delila of Amherstburg, Oliver of La Prairie, Que., Mrs. N. T .Laplante, Mrs. Ovide Guerin, and Mrs. Henry Brousseau, of Montreal.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, 136 Perry St., to-morrow morning, at 9 o'clock, to the Sacred Heart Church, and from thence to the St. Peter's cemetery, for interment.

GRAY HAIR MAKES YOU LOOK OLD

A Simple Remedy Brings Back the Natural Colour—Daadruff Quickly Removed

How often one hears the expression, "She is gray and beginning to look old." It is true that gray hair usually denotes age and is always associated with age. You never hear one referred to as having gray hair and looking young .

The hair is generally the index of age. If your hair is gray, you can't blame your friends for referring to you as looking old. You can't retain a youthful appearance if you allow your hair to grow gray. Many persons of middle age jeopardize their future simply by allowing the gray hair to become manifest. If your hair has become faded or gray, try Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, a preparation which a chemist by the name of Wyeth devised a few years ago. It is simple, inexpensive and practical, and will banish the gray hairs in a few days. It is also guaranteed to remove dandruff and promote the growth of the hair'

It is pleasant dressing for the hair, and after using it a few days itching and dryness of the scalp entirely disappear.

Don't neglect your hair. Start using Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-day and you will be surprised at the quick results.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

Nominations At Havelock

HAVELOCK, DEC. 26.—The nomination meeting in the Town Hall, Friday night was very largely attended, as it was generally expected that many civic matters were going to boil. However, comparative quietness reigned, except when one elector demanded an explanation from Reeve Knox regarding a "ten cent rake-off" on every barrel of cement used this summer to the local retail dealers. However, this customary commission to the trade by the cement powers was easily explained.

The elections on New Year's Day promise to be an interesting feature. Ed. Fennel and S. S. Joyce will battle for the reeveship. For councillors (four to be elected) the following will go to the ballot: John Howe, Wm. Jones, Wm. Weese, Dr. Kindred, Alex. Mathison, John Garrat.

The following are the candidates for trustees: H. Falkner, Alex. Primrose, Robt. Walton, W. Jackson, J. N. A. Coon. There are three to be elected.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

COLONIAL REPERTOIRE CO.

Two large audiences at the Grand yesterday afternoon and evening saw and enjoyed two amusing performances by the Colonial Repertoire Company. The programme, a series of musical numbers and comedy skits, was responsible for a great deal of amusement and the holiday spirit of the audiences overlooked any histrionic or musical defects in the presentation. Jack Quigley and Russell Lavery are a pair of capable comedians, who kept every one in a hilarious condition. Some of the musical numbers were new and others not quite so new. The company will be seen here again to-night. They are a good popular-priced attraction.

The fine and costs amounted to $10.25 each. They were arrested by Peter McCue, the Reserve Constable on the night of the 23rd and brought to the city, where they were lodged in gaol. The men are said to have got their liquor in this city, but so far the authorities have been unable to ascertain where they procured it.

SHUSTER HANGS ON

Wants to See Successor Before Handing Over Papers

ANXIOUS ABOUT FRIENDS

Teheran, Persia, Dec. 27.—W. Morgan Shuster, the American treasurer-general of Persia, who has been dismissed from office by the Cabinet in compliance with the demands contained in the Russian ultimatum, yesterday sent his reply to the Cabinet, in which he stated his willingness to hand over his accounts when his successor was named. He added that his chief solicitude now was for the welfare of his fourteen American assistants, concerning whom nothing has yet been decided.

Meetings were held yesterday in the various mosques to protest against the action of the Government. The Minister of the Interior has issued an order that new elections shall be held as soon as possible.

Despatches from Tabriz report a temporary lull in the fighting. A telegram from Shiraz, Province of Fars, where a boycott has been instituted against the Indian troops, reports another attack on the Indians near Kaneroon, in which two Sowars were killed. The situation there is regarded as serious.

Russians Censor Despatches.

Washington, Dec. 27.—A cablegram received yesterday from American Minister Russell, at Teheran, dealt with plans being made to get Mr. Shuster and his family safely out of Persia.

The meagreness of the news that is coming to the outer world from the Persian capital has led to suspicion that a severe censorship is being exercised over the news despatches by the Russians, who control some of the telegraphic channels of communication.

Russians Deny Outrages.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 27.—The Russian consul-general at Tabriz has telegraphed yesterday to the Russian Foreign Office a vigorous denial of the charges of murder and outrage which have been launched against the Russian troops by the Persian authorities.

The consul-general says: "I protest against this infamous calumny on our troops, who have always treated the peaceable populace with humanity, notwithstanding the atrocities wrecked by the Persians on our wounded soldiers and the mutilation of our killed.

Troops For the Front.

Julfa, Persia, Dec. 27.—Another large force of Russian troops of all arms left here from their encampment in the vicinity of Ispahan for Tabriz yesterday.

The reinforcements consisted of three additional regiments of rifles, three squadrons of Cossacks and two mountain batteries, all at war strength.

Russians Lost One Hundred.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 27.—A telegram from Tabriz says that the total loss of the Russians, killed and severely wounded in the recent fighting in that city, is about 100. Several bodies of Russian soldiers have been found partially burned.

The director of the Persian department of the Russian Foreign Office, in an interview yesterday, said that the Government was convinced that the Persian Government was not concerned in the anti-Russian outbreak at Tabriz or elsewhere. Those responsible were principally Armenians and criminals.

"Hands Up" at Tabriz.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 27.—The Russian consul at Tabriz in a despatch to the Foreign Office here, says that he has informed the governor that the disarmament of the populace is indispensible to the opening of negotiations. The governor has placarded the town in consequence of this, ordering the immediate surrender of all arms.

Freezing In Orange Belt.

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.—In many of the orange districts of Southern California Monday night's weather was the coldest registered in many years. In one section the mercury fell to 16 above zero, while in San Bernardino the thermometer registered 22 and in Riverside 29 degrees.

Persistent smudging probably has saved the growing crop from injury, but in some districts temperature is awaited with anxiety. What damage already has been done is not considered sufficient to bring the crop below the average.

There was a rise in temperature yesterday that encouraged growers to believe that the frost would not be severe.

Canada's Open Ports.

Ottawa, Dec. 27.—Foreign craft will continue to have free access to the coasting trade of Canada for another year at least. An order has been made by the Government, providing that vessels of not less than 1,500 tons from Italy, Germany, Austro-Hungary, and other European maritime countries, as well as Argentina and Japan shall be admitted to the coasting trade of the Dominion between Nova Scotia and Quebec on the same terms and conditions as Canadian vessels to the end of 1912.

Roundhouse Collapsed.

Altoona, Pa., Dec. 27.—Half of the roof of the old Pennsylvania Railroad Pittsburg division round house in this city, now used for the housing of passenger locomotives of all divisions, fell in without warning yesterday. A number of workmen were injured, but none fatally.

The fire department was on the ground promptly and prevented the building catching fire. About 20 locomotives were damaged.

Vatican Wants Triple Alliance.

Rome, Dec. 27.—An exchange of communications between the Vatican foreign office and the chancellors of European powers is proceeding at the present moment with the greatest activity. The subject of the communications is the war in Tripoli, but the question of the renewal in 1914 of the triple alliance between Germany, Austria-Hungary and Italy is also being discussed.

Efforts are being made both by the Government in Constantinople and the Italian Foreign Office to find a possible basis for conclusion of peace between the two countries.

The negotiations between the triple alliance are of the most important character, as it is conceivable that they might even result in the withdrawal of Italy from the alliance and the consequent strengthening of the triple entente between Great Britain, France and Russia.

The Italian ambassador at Berlin is now in Rome, where he is giving a verbal report to the Foreign Minister, Marquis di San Giuliano, as to the disposition of Germany.

Farmer Killed by Train.

Canfield, Dec. 27.—A fatal accident occurred at 11.45 o'clock, Monday night, about two miles west of Canfield, when Edgar Brown, a highly respected young farmer, was struck by a Grand Trunk eastbound train.

Mr. Brown, accompanied by his wife and lady friends, was returning from a Christmas entertainment at Canfield, when meeting the train the ladies stepped to one side, Mr. Brown to the other. He apparently changed his mind and attempted to recross the track and was struck, receiving such injuries that caused his death in an hour. Deceased leaves a young wife, but no family.

SETTLEMENT EXPECTED

Tang Shao Si Expects Settlement Within a Few Days

MISSIONARIES ARE SAFE

New York, Dec. 27.—Settlement of the question of the future form of Government in China, now the subject of the peace conference between the revolutionaries and the Imperialists at Shanghai, is expected "within two or three days," according to a cablegram received here yesterday by the Columbia University Chinese Students' Club, from Tang Shao Si, the representative of Premier Yuan Shi Kai, at the conference.

The message is an answer to a long cablegram sent to Tang Shao Yi on Monday by the club in behalf of the Chinese students of the United States, which he was asked to deliver to the Premier, with a copy to Wu Ting Fang, chief of the revolutionists.

The students favored a republican form of government, giving several reasons therefore.

In reply the following cablegram was received:

"To the Chinese student body in the U.S., in care of Columbia University Chinese Student Club:

"Since I retired from public life I have long been indifferent to re-entering the official world. This time circumstances have compelled me, with my poor health, to come down to the south. I earnestly wish that the situation may be peacefully settled, and I wish to do my best to serve the people. I expect that a settlement will be reached within two or three days. Having received your cablegram despatched from afar, I take this opportunity to express my appreciation.

(Signed) "Tang Shao Yi."

Decide China's Fate.

Pekin, China, Dec. 27.—Premier Yuan Shi Kai has submitted to the more prominent Manchus here the proposal emanating from Shanghai for the meeting of a special national assembly in order to decide on the future form of government which shall be adopted for China.

This step taken by the Premier practically means that he asks the court to decide its own fate, because the members of such a national assembly would decide in favor of a republic.

If the Manchus agree to adopt the suggestion, their decision to do so will be promulgated as an edict, which in all probability will be made public in the course of the day.

Missionaries Safe.

Hankow, China, Dec. 27.—Eighty missionaries, a majority of whom are Scandinavian-Americans, have arrived here from the Lachow and Fancheng districts in the northwest of the Province of Hupeh. A few more still remain at Lachow awaiting the arrival of others from outlying stations. The missionaries were escorted from their station first by revolutionary troops and afterwards by Imperial Government troops. They report that the cities in the province are peaceful, but that the country is infested with robbers.

Consular reports from Chengtu, capital of the Province of Cze Chuen, dated Dec. 5, say that complete anarchy prevails in the surrounding country. There has been much kidnapping and robbery and most of the people have buried their money.

The British consul at Ichang, in the Province of Hupeh, writing on Dec. 21, says that there is serious danger of an anti-foreign outbreak there.

Bradbury Was Misquoted.

Ottawa, Dec. 27.—George H. Bradbury, M.P., of Selkirk, is here to-day. He says that he did not tell a Manitoba audience, as reported, that a Manitoba man, then in Ottawa, would succeed R. L. Borden as Premier.

"Nothing that I said could be so construed," said Mr. Bradbury.

The British steamer Guillemot from London for Genoa, foundered in the Bay of Biscay on Dec. 21. The captain and 15 of her crew were lost. Seven survivors were picked up by the steamer Lincairn.

There have been several engagements between the Riff tribesmen and the Spanish troops near Melilla. The tribesmen met with a severe repulse on Dec. 22, and were again driven back on the two days following.

His Royal Highness the Governor-General, who is also the chief scout for Canada, has expressed a desire to meet the boy scouts on New Year's morning at Rideau Hall. All the Ottawa scout masters have been notified.

Carrying a suit case containing 70 sticks of dynamite, a roll of fuses and two quarts of whisky, George Bridges, who refuses to tell anything concerning himself, was arrested Monday night at Monessen, Pa., a mill town near Pittsburg.

Roosevelt Raises a Row.

New York, Dec. 27.—Close on the heels of one great peace meeting, which was broken up by a section of the audience opposed to the ratification of President Taft's proposed treaties with England and France, clouds of disagreement have spread about what is being planned as one of the greatest peace dinners the country has ever seen, here, next Saturday night.

It developed yesterday, according to a member of the committee in charge of the dinner, that former President Roosevelt had replied to a semi-official invitation to the function, at which President Taft will be the principal speaker, with a letter declaring that his sentiments were wholly at variance with those to be expressed at the affair, and censuring as "traitors" to their principles all who accepted invitations to the dinner without agreeing with its purposes.

John Temple Graves was selected yesterday as toastmaster of the dinner at which it is expected to seat 800 prominent persons, including a whole special train load of diplomats from Washington. A letter received from President Taft read: He agreed to be present and to make a thirty-minute speech, as well as to remain throughout the dinner, if it did not continue for more than three hours and a half.

May Raise Duty on U. S. Cotton.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 27.—The project introduced in the Douma by ex-President Cuchkoff, providing for an increase in the duties imposed on American products imported into Russia, has stirred business circles. The national council of the Congresses of Industry and Commerce met here yesterday to discuss this important subject, while the central committee of the Octoberist party has been summoned to meet at Moscow.

M. Guchkoff explained yesterday that the proposed duty on American cotton signified a menace to the U. S. but that the measure will be subjected to serious consideration before it is adopted. The Douma has already voted to submit the proposal to the financial committee.

FOUL PLAY SUSPECTED

Toronto Woman Dies Under Suspicious Circumstances

UTTERED CRIES FOR HELP

Toronto, Dec. 27.—Mystery surrounds the death of Elizabeth Fallon 11 Christopher street. The woman died in the General Hospital on Friday morning, twenty-four hours after having been removed there in a semi-conscious condition, by order of Dr. Robinson of College street, who was summoned to the house by Mrs. Stevenson of the General Hospital free surgery on Chestnut street. He found the woman suffering from injuries to the head. How long she had been in that condition and how she sustained the wound is baffling to the police, who fear that she has been the victim of foul play.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 17, around eight o'clock, about fifteen Italians gathered in the Christopher street house to enjoy the contents of a fifty-cent flask and have a merry time in general.

Elizabeth Fallen was the only woman amongst the group, she being the mistress of the three-roomed house, two rooms of which she rents.

"Help! help! Andrew, help!" cried the woman about 8.30 o'clock.

Andrew Silvanio was sick in the front room and on hearing the woman scream, rushed to her assistance, but by the time he reached the room where the visitors were assembled, all was quiet and Andrew was forcibly hurled against the wall by some warlike gentleman.

Whether the woman sustained the injury to her head at that time or not is still a mystery. The post-mortem show that she had received a blow on, or struck her head against something.

There will possibly be an arrest made before the case is gone on with on Friday.

"Triangle" Case Goes to Jury.

New York, Dec. 27.—Taking of testimony in the trial of Isaac Harris and Max Blanck, proprietors of the Triangle Waist Co., charged with manslaughter in connection with the Asch building fire of last March, when 147 lives were lost, was completed yesterday, and the case will probably go to the jury late to-day after counsel have summed up.

Robert Wolfson, the firm's head cutter, swore yesterday that Harris had said to him after the fire: "Well, the dead must be buried, but the living must go on and live. Sure, the door was locked or they would have robbed me of my fortune."

Max Blanck was also questioned and like his partner, denied all the material charges brought against him by various witnesses during the trial, concerning issuing orders that doors should be locked to prevent theft and threatening to discharge employes, who testified at the trial against him.

Murdered Two Children.

Muskogee, Okla., Dec. 27.—Court enquiry into the conspiracy that resulted in the death of two negro children, who owned oil lands valued at $250,000, went forward rapidly yesterday. D. C. Allen, the negro accused of having killed the children, Herbert and Castella Sell, pleaded guilty. He was sentenced to life imprisonment.

F. L. Martin and John Coombs, the latter a wealthy oil operator of Bartlesville, are accused of having had a part in the conspiracy against the children.

One white man has been convicted in the case. He is William Swin. It was charged he promised the negro Allen $3,500 to kill the Sell children.

The alleged conspiracy aimed at possession of the children's valuable oil lands.

Cannot Break Marriage.

Rome, Dec. 27.—The Vatican has declined to grant to Count Boni de Castellane an annulment of his marriage with Anna Gould, who is now the Duchess of Talleyrand and Sagan. Countess de Castellane was granted a divorce from her husband and given the custody of their three children on Nov. 14, 1906. About a year ago Count Boni applied to the Vatican for annulment of the marriage.

For several months past the congregation of the council has had under advisement the process received from the Archbishopric of Paris concerning the case. When Mgr. Amette, Archbishop of Paris, came to Rome recently to receive the red hat, he gave to the Pope and Cardinal Gennari, prefect of the Congregation of the Council, all the details in his possession concerning the case and the situation of the parties involved.

Anna To Boni.

Rome, Dec. 27.—Count Boni de Castellane, the former husband of the present Duchess of Talleyrand and Sagan, whose maiden name was Anna Gould, being now in Rome in order to urge the granting by the Vatican of the annulment of his marriage, the Duchess of Talleyrand has expressed her desire to make public the following statement from Rome:

"I hope the count will succeed, as that would free me from all moral obligation to bring up the children in their father's religion.

(Signed) "Duchess Anna Talleyrand."

Cholera Scare Passes.

Ottawa, Dec. 27.—There has been a relaxation of the quarantine regulations against cholera. An order has been made by the director-general of public health that bacteriological examination of passengers from Italy is hereafter to apply only to cholera-infected vessels.

Two Die In Cells."

Toronto, Dec. 27.—Early yesterday morning the bodies of Lawrence Vale, 65 years old, who lived at Weston, and a middle-aged man, who is believed to be James Waterman, who formerly boarded at 288 Adelaide street west, were removed to the morgue by the police. Before their admission to St. Michael's Hospital both had been placed under arrest on charges of drunkenness.

Waterman was found lying in a doorway in Queen street, near McCaul, by Constable McLeod shortly before midnight, and sent in the patrol to the Agnes street station. Upon reaching there Sergt. McFarlane ordered his immediate removal to the hospital, where the man died about half an hour later.

After being discharged from the Court street station at 10 o'clock last night to enable him to get a car home, Lawrence Vale was re-arrested at 11.35 for being drunk at King and Sumach street. When he was brought to the station Sergt. Allison had him removed to the hospital. Vale died while being carried into the hospital. He was an exceptionally large man, weighing over 300 pounds, and kept a shoe repairing shop at Weston.

Inquests will be held to-day.

Kingston's Golden Wedding.

Kingston, Dec. 27.—Thomas McAuley, Kingston's veteran bookseller, and Mrs. McAuley yesterday celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. They were married here in St. James' Church fifty years ago and have lived here ever since.

Miss Myra, daughter of Abraham Shaw, inspector of customs, was married yesterday to D. W. Richmond of Ottawa, a graduate of Queen's. Rev. T. W. Neal officiated.

Miss Gilder on the Stage.

New York, Dec. 27.—Under the inconspicuous name of Dorothea Coleman, Dorothea Gilder, daughter of the late Richard Watson Gilder, American poet and editor of The Century Magazine, has begun a stage career. It become known yesterday that she had made her debut Monday night in a Broadway production.

Peace Has Its Victims.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 27.—A brawl occurred Monday morning among time-expired sailors employed at the gunpowder works in the estuaries of St. Petersburg, and soldiers. A soldier was wounded and a sergeant, who attempted to interfere had his head fractured by a small calibre shell.

Brantford's Hospital Option.

Brantford, Dec. 27.—Brantford ratepayers will vote on Monday next on a bylaw to authorize the issue of $35,000 worth of debentures for the erection of a new wing at the John H. Stratford Hospital, and the reconstruction of the entire hospital plant, which was a bequest to this city of the late John H. Stratford.

If the bylaw carries, an additional forty beds will be given.

The County Council will supplement the city's expenditure by $15,000.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

AND so it really is all over at last—the day that we've worked and planned for so long. This is the day after Christmas and it's time for us to take up our daily round again, "and forget it till another year be gone."

But before you do forget it, just a word or two. Another Christmas is coming. Doubtless you can scarcely realise that in your present day-after mood, and perhaps it is hardly a welcome realisation, but is' true just the same. And the reason I speak of it is because there are so many ways in which you can help yourself, by sowing the seeds of preparation for another Christmas right now, and not waiting until it is too late for them to take proper root.

In the first place, be sure to have a box in which to put away Christmas ribbons, the nice soft paper that your gifts were wrapped in, the left over Christmas "stickers," stamps, mottoes and tags, the Christmas card that didn't get sent, and all the other little odds and ends of Christmas that will come in so handy and save so many much needed pennies at another holiday season.

Another way of preparing for Christmas, and incidentally for any birthdays that will be likely to claim your attention, is to keep a weather ear open to hear, and a gift note book ready to receive the disappointments of your friends and relatives. "I was rather sorry that no one happened to give me etc.," or "I did want such and such," are extremely good foundations for a welcome gift some other time. You can also build on the admirations and envy aroused by other peoples' gifts. If one friend raves over the pretty hatpin or dainty apron which another friend received, you can safely set it down that a similar gift would probably receive a welcome from her.

Last year I wrote you about a resolution which I had made to buy a gift a month all the year and thus lessen the final financial strain, take advantags of sales and make my final Christmas shopping much less strenuous.

I want to tell you that I kept the resolution and that it proved quite as much a blessing as I had hoped. My method left with little more than an afternoon's shopping to do, and in better financial shape to do it, than I have ever been.

I heartily recommend it to every one who has found the past Christmas too strenuous, either physically, mentally or financially.

o o o o

IN the city of Boston, a few weeks ago, a happy wedding party ended abruptly in a funeral—nay more, two funerals.

The automobile, in which six of the guests were pursuing the bridal couple, who were fleeing in another car, turned turtle. Two women were killed instantly. The litle bridesmaid died with the bouquet which she had held during the ceremony in one hand, and in the other the confetti, with which she had planned to shower the bride and groom. A third woman was so badly injured about the spinal column that she may die or, worse still, may live crippled for life.

Not so very long ago in another city, the horses of the bridal carriage were frightened by the throwing of old shoes, and the bride was thrown out against a tree and instantly killed.

These are two of the more striking and terrible casualties resulting from our pleasant way of celebrating the knotting of the nuptial tie, but every city in the country annually furnishes to the news columns its quota of similar, though lesser accidents.

Truly one is tempted to cry out with the prophet, "How long, O Lord?"

Now I am not one of the reactionaries who thinks that because of these terrible things, all jollification at weddings should cease.

On the contrary, it seems to me that there is nothing prettier or more desirable than the truly sweet and pretty wedding customs.

I love to go to a wedding where the bride carries out all the jolly little usages that make for harmless fun.

I think there is nothing more pleasantly deadly to disagreeable stiffness and formality, than the jolly custom of having a bride cake to be cut by the bride, and containing the time honoured symbols of thimble, ring and dime.

I think there is no prettier picture than the bride makes, when half way up the stairs she pauses and throws her shower bouquet to the many-coloured group below, itself a living bouquet.

And if the housemates do not object to the task of cleaning up afterwards, I do not see any possible harm in the shower of confetti with which the descending couple is greeted, and surely it makes a hilarious and gorgeous setting for the happy departure.

But when the couple go out of the door of the home, I think that right there the jollification should stop and stop short.

Would it be possible to make young people stop like this right at the height of their excitement and merry making, you question ?

I think so.

Simply let the father and mother circulate the word among the young folks in the early evening, that while all reasonable demonstration inside the house will be welcomed, once the couple passed through the front door, they are to be considered as on their own territory.

Let the front door, and not the railroad station, the hotel, or any point at which the couple succeed in eluding pursuit, be considered as the point at which demonstrations shall completely cease, and I'm sure our newspapers will no longer be giving us tragic stories, such as that which was recently published in Boston, supposedly the city of progress and the home of intellect and reason.

HOW IT HAPPENED

A Short Story

Niels Berg called as usual on Wednesday evening. The house where Birgit Lang lived was a small one. "Is Miss Lang in?"

The servant smiled pleasantly as she said that her young mistress was. At the same time she made way for Niels to enter. But instead of entering he stared at the lighted blind of the window, for he saw the silhouette of Birgit thrown on it. She was talking to someone; an arm was waved, and:

"Won't you come in, sir?"

"Oh, yes, of course."

Niels stepped into the little hall. The servant left him there, after she had taken his coat and gone to the dining room.

He made a step toward the door. Then he came to a sudden stop. It was Birgit's voice. The servant had said nothing about her having company. She was talking quickly in her well known, decided manner.

"No, no, Mr. Bunkefiod"—heavens, what a name—"you must not talk like that. I am very sensible indeed of what you have said to me. Well, shall we leave it for a day or two? Do you mind? Thank you so much. You are very good to say you love me."

Niels pictured the scene and shivered. She would be sitting in her usual place by the fire and looking up at the caitiff who was making love to her. The seconds flashed by. Niels was thinking—thinking of how pretty she was and the things she had said to him. There had been times of black poverty when he had almost given up all hope of ever being able to win her.

"Dear Mr. Bunkefiod," she was saying, "you must forgive me. I never meant to be unkind."

It was enough. Niel Berg caught his breath. Everything seemed to be spinning round him.

The poor fellow reached the hall stand and caught at his coat; he did not stop to put it on; his hat and stick were seised and he moved to the front door.

He was punctual at the office the next morning. But nothing seemed to matter at all. There was no one in whom he could confide.

His hard luck was extra hard because he had the feeling that if he had hurried up he would have won. That was it. She had grown tired of waiting. How could he blame her? Yet he had meant to propose each time he saw her. He had carried a letter proposing to her in his pocket for months, and had burned it at the end, as he felt that she would prefer him to ask for himself instead of setting it down on paper.

But now it was all over. As the days passed he grew morbid, and on the Wednesday, when he was wont to call he went past the house just to look at the window.

Then he went back to his lonely chamber and sat down to think. He would go away. There was a chance of a position abroad. Perhaps if he went way he would be able to live.

A week went by. Then one evening as he left the office he suddenly came upon Birgit. She had evidently been out shopping, for she was carrying a big parcel.

She smiled and said, "Good evening. You are quite a stranger."

Instinct made him respond to her greeting.

"Let me carry your parcel," he said.

"Oh, don't trouble, thanks; it is quite light."

He took hold of the package.

"I can't allow you to do it. You need not refuse. He would not mind that."

"How absurb you are!"

"I suppose I am."

"Of course you are," she said, decidedly. "But whom do you mean by him?"

"Why, Mr. Bunkefiod, to be sure."

"Oh," she laughed. "No, he would not mind."

"Nature provides the mental wherewithal to be calm outwardly, even to the victims of the most awful despair. To any passerby who had chanced to regard the couple there would have been nothing more out of the way than the spectacle of an attentive young man and a pretty girl, who was blushing.

"But what made you think of him?" said Birgit.

"I don't know, I'm sure."

"You always laughed at me."

"Now you are positively scathing."

"I?"

"Yes, you."

"I hope you will be happy," he said. "I don't quite know how things will go—now, but I won't worry you by whining. The only thing is that I loved you and was always trying to ask you to marry me, but the chance never came. There was always something or other in the way, and then I began to be afraid. You might have laughed. But I did love you and would have died for you, or done anything. It does not seem like life now at all. Before, I stopped away for months at a time, but I was thinking of you every minute. Ah, if only one could swing the time back so that I might just be able to come in again one evening as I used to and say——"

The girl had stopped and had faced him, a look on her face he had never seen there before.

"Say, what?" she said. "What would you have said?"

"Will you marry me?"

"Do you mean it?"

"Yes, I mean it more than anything in the world."

"I oughtn't to have done it," she said. "You dear old thing. But you will forgive me. You did not propose and I thought you would come in that night. I knew you were outside, and I pretended to be talking to someone just to—to buck you up a bit."

Then he understood, and when he hugged her, oblivious of time and place, she merely laughed and murmured:

"I am very sorry, Niels."—Boston Post.

Delhi

Delhi, which by Royal proclamation, became the capital of India, instead of Calcutta, was formerly the capital of the Patan and Mogul empires, and was then the largest city in Hindostan, covering an area of 16 square miles, and having a population of 2,000,000. Its circumference is now 7 miles. The ancient metropolis of the Mogul empire is now only indicated by a vast track covered with ruins. The present city is built on two rocky eminences, and is surrounded by walls of red sandstone 60 feet high, with a mean 30 feet broad. There are seven colossal arched gates defended by round bulwarks. The most interesting building in Delhi, and the most magnificent structure of the kind in India, is the palace of the Great Mogul, built by Shah Jehan, commenced in 1631, and finished in 10 years. The great mosque of Delhi is considered by the Mahommedans to be the wonder of the world. It is built of white marble and red sandstone and has two minarets each 150 feet high.

The change is made because of the sedition in Calcutta, and because Delhi is held in such reverence by many Mahommedans.

CANADA'S MORTALITY

Over Half the People Die Before 25 Years of Age.

Sir Richard Scott declared, in the Senate, that it should be the highest duty of every government to see that laws were made and enforced for the preservation of public health. The government of Canada had not lived up to their duty on the question. The Dominion placed the duty of caring for public health on the provinces and the provinces passed it back to the Dominion. The census figures showed that 81,000 persons were born in Canada in 1901, and of these 81,000 persons, 21,828 died before becoming a year old, and 10,019 died within the next four years. The record was a shocking one, but the census figures showed that while 81,000 persons had been born in that year, there had in the previous 25 years been 43,595 deaths of persons who did not reach the age of 25. It was a tragic thing to think that over half the people born in a single year in Canada should die before they had passed their 25th year. Most of the children who died under the age of three were murdered through the ignorant administration of deadly soothing lotions of various kinds.

THE FATTEST WOMAN

Had to Tear Down Doors to Admit a Fat Woman to a Theatre.

Mrs. Flossie Ouilette, weighing 695 pounds, the biggest fat lady who ever went to Boston, and a native and long-time resident of Montreal, tipped over a hack and caused much other excitement in trying to get into a museum where she was to be exhibited. Mrs. Ouilette is so wide that there was not an entrance to the museum big enough for her to enter, and several doors had to be taken down. Even taking down the doors was not enough, for the workmen had to chop away part of the entrance before she could get in.

Once inside the museum, Flossie got wedged in the stairs, the banisters broke and Flossie and staircase fell on top of the stage scenery, all falling in a heap.

Mrs. Ouilette, after leaving Canada, went to Lowell, Mass., where she married and now has twelve children, all of normal size. She is said to be the fattest woman in the world.

Russell Motor Cars

"Made Up to a Standard—Not Down to a Price."

SAFETY in a car will give mental comfort, and we have told you of the safety of a Russell car, but physical comfort is a different matter.

COMFORT: Ride in a Russell car for an hour and then change to an ordinary car—to a car with stiff springs and scanty cushions—a car that bobs about and sways from top heaviness.

The springs in the Russell are the best springs that can be made, and they are exactly suited to the weight of the body. Too springy a spring bounces the passenger continually—too stiff a spring is as bad as none.

And the cushions. Built up, not stuffed with a stick or by machinery, as is common practice. Each cushion has as many coil steel pillow springs as the space will permit and these are topped by a deep tufted bed of long curled hair, long because short hair mats and grows lumpy. Over all is the best leather covering. The seat coverings slope backward slightly to give a natural seat. Nothing but the care bestowed on the finest made to order private carriage can compare with the pains taken with Russell upholstery.

Then the width of the seats. Have you never ridden in a car where your arms were glued to your sides by the other passengers' pressing upon you? Russell seats are roomy. Furthermore, their height from the floor is just right for comfort and there's abundance of foot room.

By contrast—by test—by the evidence of your own physical comfort and discomfort—prove for yourself that for easy riding qualities the Russell is a law unto itself.

COUNTING THE STARS

The Tremendous Task of a Dutch Astronomer

A tremendous task, that of counting the stars up to the 19th magnitude, has been undertaken by the Dutch astronomer Professor Kapteyn, who has collected all the material furnished by the most recent discoveries. Stars of less size than the 14th magnitude are found in millions in the milky way, and the work of counting them from photographic plates can best be described as similar to counting blood corpuscles under a microscope. Professor Kapteyn places the total at 948,000,000 stars, the average being 20,400 stars to the square degree of the heavens. He has further calculated that the total light emanating from all the stars is equal to 2,324 times the luminosity of a star of the first magnitude. According to the Dutch scientist the boundaries of the universe, as far as human science has been able to penetrate, extend to 23,000 light years.

A CANADIAN SWIMMER

George Simpson, Vancouver Man Established a Reputation.

Geo. Y. Simpson, of the Vancouver Rowing Club, recently came into the limelight by establishing a new Canadian record for the mile breast stroke at Victoria. He is one of the best swimmers in the country, a fact which has been well established by his showing in the various swimming competitions which have been held at the coast during the past few years. It is doubtful if any other Canadian swimmer can point to such a record as can the Vancouver swimmer during the past five years, a record of which any Canadian might well feel proud. In 1906 he came into prominence in swimming circles at the coast when he captured the one-mile championship of British Columbia, and to add further glory to the accomplishment took the half-mile championship also. In each of the following years he has won the mile championship and recently in an effort against time created a new mark for Canada.

WEALTH IN OLD STAMPS

The Agreeable Surprise That Came to a Sydney Daughter.

A lady living in Sydney for many years has hoarded a collection of postal stamps left by her father, who had pursued his hobby of collecting for fifty years. The daughter was ignorant of any knowledge of philately, and threw the stamps into an old trunk. Last week she visited a stamp exhibition, and for the first time awoke to the value of the stamps in her possession. She secured the assistance of experts, who estimate the value of the collection at $100,000.

TO COMMEMORATE CORONATION

The Prince of Wales has planted a Windsor Forest Oak tree at Flemish Farm, Windsor Great Park, to commemorate Coronation Year. It was placed near the oak planted by King George last year to commemorate his first day's shooting as King in Windsor Forest. The spade used had painted upon it the colours of the Union Jack.

THE ROYAL ROBES

For the Durbar the King-Emperor wore a robe of imperial purple, a surcoat of purple, white satin breeches and silk stockings. He was decked with the collars of the Orders of the Garter and the Star of India, and also with the star of the former order. The Imperial crown consisted of a band of diamonds studded with large emeralds and sapphires, with rubies in the centre, and a cap of purple velvet tasked up with ermine.

The Queen-Empress' dress was of white silk, embroidered with the designs of lilies, thistles and shamrocks with a border of lotus flowers. The Star of India, emblematical of the jewel of her dress. Her Majesty's Imperial robe was of purple velvet lined with ermine, and with a border of gold braid. She wore the emblems of the Garter and the Star of India. Her ornaments were a diamond and opal bracelet and brooches.

CINNIBAR IN NEW ONTARIO

Discovery Made by Chief Commando of the Ojibways.

One of the most remarkable of Ontario's mineral discoveries has been made on the Groundhog River, six miles north of the Transcontinental River. This find is a rich deposit of cinnibar, which adds another to Ontario's many minerals. This cinnibar deposit was discovered by Chief Commando of the Objiways, for whom the lake in the Town of Cochrane is named. His knowledge of the ore was not what led him to the discovery, but the fact that the quicksilver, of which cinnibar is a sulphide salt, was found there in the free State. A quantity of the mercury was obtained by Commando, bottled and turned over to acquaintances, who have interested Toronto capitalists in the matter. The Indian was wise enough to first stake nine claims for himself. Cinnibar is approximately 86 per cent. mercury, which is worth from $32 to $40 a flask of 75 pounds. This deposit, if extensive as it is believed, will prove almost as good as the best mines of the North. Up to the present there has been practically no quicksilver produced in Canada, the bulk of the world's production coming from the States. It has been known for some time that a large deposit existed farther north, but it was too remote to be of interest. The proximity of this deposit to the railroad makes it of value, however.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN

The Site Can be Ascertained With Reasonable Accuracy

Few persons are aware that experts have long been of the opinion that the site of the Garden of Eden can actually be determined with a fair amount of accuracy. They maintain that it lies in Mesopotamia somewhere between Babylon and Bagdad. And there has just been set on foot a scheme for restoring the Garden of Eden.

The district is at the present day almost a desert. But there is abundant proof that it was once a fertile paradise. And the proposed restoration, which will take the form of a scientific restoration, is undertaken as much in the belief that it will prove a profitable commercial enterprise as for its religious association.

Under the direction of Sir John Jackson, an army of 3,000 workers has already started on the preliminary work, which consists of preparing the land for the canals and other waterways which will be fed by a series of gigantic damming operations of the ancient rivers of Tigris and Euphrates.

It is estimated that the scheme will cost about twenty millions sterling, which is being supplied by the Turkish Government. But it is expected that as soon as the work is completed, the restored Garden of Eden will be readily sold for thirty-eight millions; and there will be, in addition, all the industrial development and prosperity that follows upon successful colonization.

If this gigantic scheme is brought to a successful conclusion it is highly probable that there will be a stream of emigrants to Eden, just as there is at the present day to Canada and elsewhere.

BEST BANKNOTES.

They Are Produced by American Talent and Methods.

HARDEST TO COUNTERFEIT.

From the Time of Paul Revere, the First American Banknote Artist, Ours Have Been More Difficult to Imitate Than Those of the Old World.

To say that Americans make the best banknotes in the world may sound at first rather boastful, and yet any history of the art and industry of note engraving which failed to record that fact would be incomplete. Paul Revere was the first American banknote artist, and from the time of the chartering of the Bank of North America under the direction of Robert Morris, in 1781, up to the present American engravers have excelled not only in the artistic quality of their designs, but in their provisions against counterfeiting.

Marco Polo found banknotes in China ages ago, printed on paper made from the bark of the mulberry tree. One of the notes upon which the great Venetian traveler himself may have gazed is on exhibition at this day in the office of an American company. It is one of a series issued by the Ming dynasty about 1399 A. D.—"current anywhere under heaven"—and seems to have been printed from wooden blocks on a sheet of paper nine by thirteen inches, a bigger surface than any man could cover with both hands outstretched. It is good for "one string of cash." The provision against forgery is simple to the point of severity: "Counterfeiters hereof will be executed. Persons giving information of counterfeiters will be rewarded with taels 250 and in addition will receive the property belonging to the criminal."

Another great government has placed much dependence upon death as a deterrent to imitators of its promises to pay. When Jacob Perkins of Newburyport, Mass., invented the method of transferring designs from hardened steel plates to steel cylinders and retransferring to flat plates, thus enabling the engraver to devote the time necessary to accomplish his best work in the original and reproduce it at will, the new process aroused international interest. Mr. Perkins and his associates went to London in 1819 at the instance of the British minister at Washington to help the Bank of England to issue notes not easily counterfeited. But the conservative old bank refused to adopt the new method, preferring, as one of the Americans said, to rely upon the hangman rather than the engraver. Nevertheless the English began in time to follow American methods after the geometric lathe had been invented by Asa Spencer of New London, Conn., and improved by Cyrus Durand.

The governments of continental Europe depend exclusively upon color work to protect their paper currency, and several of the large banks of issue have civil engineers in charge of their bureau of engraving and printing, though what connection there may be between engineering and engraving is a mystery. Many Italian banknotes are easy to counterfeit. The Bank of Spain has of late abandoned its own plant because its notes were imitated so successfully that counterfeits were accepted by the bank without question. A private concern now does the work. The Bank of Greece now uses the American method, having had sad experiences with notes of Austrian, German and English fashioning.

A myth that probably will never die tells us that the notes of the Bank of England cannot be counterfeited. As a matter of fact, they can be imitated readily enough, for little attempt is made to protect the notes beyond the use of a watermark paper. The watermark can be easily copied.

One practical safeguard of great effectiveness is the custom of the Bank of England to cancel every note that is returned to the bank and issue another in its place. This and the practice of keeping a record of the numbers of all bank notes used in every business establishment keep alive a keen sense of responsibility which adds to security. The custom of circulating soiled banknotes, of course, gives the counterfeiter his best opportunity. Forgery is much more readily detected in a crisp, stiff, new bill than in a rumpled and dirty one.

The American style of banknote has become the standard in the countries of Central and South America. The experience of the Brazilian government led the way in this after various disappointments. First the much vaunted Austrian system was tried, the notes being engraved and printed in England under that system. They proved a complete failure. Counterfeiters flourished. The Brazilians tried banknotes made in France, and these were promptly and extensively imitated as soon as the counterfeiters could get their plates and paper ready. Brazil tried German and English establishments, but still without securing protection to the banknote circulation, and at last turned to the United States and found a type of bills practically impossible to counterfeit. So it is no boast, but a mere record of fact, to state that Americans make the best banknotes in the world.—Detroit News.

SHOT DOWN BY NATIVES.

English Official Ambushed and Killed on Nigerian Canoe Trip.

Out in the wild bushlands of Southern Nigeria, far from the haunts of white men, a punitive expedition has found the body of an Englishman with the base of his skull shot away.

The body is that of H. P. James, District Commissioner of Nigeria, who was done to death by the treacherous Ijaws natives last month.

How this brave man and three armed police were shot down by the blacks whom they took to be their friends, has been communicated to Reuter's, and makes an affecting story.

Mr. James was only twenty-nine years of age and was regarded as a most promising officer.

It has been ascertained that the commissioner and his companions were attacked by the natives at the town of Adagbarbari, on the boundary line between the Brass and Forcades districts.

Without the slightest warning, and despite the efforts of the interpreter accompanying the party, armed natives opened fire on them at twenty-five yards' range.

Mr. James was the first to fall, shot through the head and thigh; then one by one his native companions fell beneath the murderous fire.

The account of the affair was given by the interpreter, who escaped by diving into the creek and swimming under water.

The Ijaws evidently fear the approach of the punitive expedition, for the troops found the native town deserted, the inhabitants having hidden in outlying creeks.

The Air In London's "Tube."

A series of scientific tests to determine the actual improvement in the atmosphere obtained in the Central London tube railway through the installation of the ozonair system of ventilation, says The London Daily Mail, have been begun by W. J. Dibdin, analytical chemist, of Howick place, S.W. At present the system is in full working order at the Bank and Chancery lane stations only, the work of installing plants throughout the rest of the line having been delayed by the recent labor troubles. Samples of air have been taken both inside and outside Chancery lane station, and also at the platform level at Shepherd's Bush Station, where the new ventilators have not yet been installed.

"Measure of the actual quantity of ozone in the outside air, and the air at the two stations, are not being made on account of the unstable character of 'ozone,'" Mr. Dibdin explained. "Within three or four minutes the ozone molecules, represented by the chemical symbol O_3, are broken down into molecules of the ordinary oxygen of the air, O_2. If ozone is present we hope to determine its measure of usefulness by the decreased amount of bacteria found in the air mixed with it."

Color tests to determine the actual presence of ozone were also made by exposing to the atmosphere sheets of paper treated with starch and potassium iodide. Any free ozone present liberates free iodine from the potassium iodide, and this acting on the starch, produces a blue color.

Beauty and Clothes.

In the opinion of Mr. Seymour Lucas, whose splendid collection of historical costumes has been acquired for the new London Museum, the present-day style of men's dress is the last word in ugliness. "Who can look really dignified in our modern dress?" he remarks, apropos of the pictures que show made by the gallants of old in their magnificent brocades and velvets. "When our drab trousers, waistcoats, and coats go to the museum they may create interest, but they will never be described as artistic. Trousers heralded the end of art in clothes. We hide everything below the knee which from the point of view of art, is most deplorable." Mr. Lucas, whose wife, by the way, is an exceptionally clever artist, and who exhibited his first picture at the Academy when he was twenty-two, has been collecting historical costumes and armor for many years past and often assisted the late Sir Henry Irving in the preparation of his historical plays.

A Belated Pension.

Mr. Thomas Foley, Galashiels, a Crimean veteran, has just received his first payment of pension. When attending the veterans' review in Edinburgh an officer in conversing with Mr. Foley made the discovery that the veteran had never received a pension. He promised to write to the War Office on the subject, and Mr. Foley takes it that it is the result of this gentleman's efforts that he received his first payment of pension, which he considers it is a great honor to receive.

WELCOME WORDS TO WOMEN

Women who suffer with disorders peculiar to their sex should write to Dr. Pierce and receive free the advice of a physician of over 40 years' experience—a skilled and successful specialist in the diseases of women. Every letter of this sort has the most careful consideration and is regarded as sacredly confidential. Many sensitively modest women write fully to Dr. Pierce what they would shrink from telling to their local physician. The local physician is pretty sure to say that he cannot do anything without "an examination." Dr. Pierce holds that these distasteful examinations are generally needless—and that no woman, except in rare cases, should submit to them.

Dr. Pierce's treatment will cure you right in the privacy of your own home. His "Favorite Prescription" has cured hundreds of thousands, some of them the worst of cases.

It is the only medicine of its kind that is the product of a regularly graduated physician. The only one good enough that its makers dare to print its every ingredient on its outside wrapper. There's no secrecy. It will bear examination. No alcohol and no habit-forming drugs are found in it. Some unscrupulous medicine dealers may offer you a substitute. Don't take it. Don't trifle with your health. Write to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, President, Buffalo, N. Y.,—take the advice received and be well.

BARKING FOR A LIVING

SOME OF THE LATEST WAYS OF MAKING MONEY.

Selling Time, Acting as a Living Target, Luring Dogs to Bark, Dancing at Academies, Selling Broken Glass Are a Few of the Queer Trades—How Would You Like to Name Babies For a Livelihood.

There lives at Maidenhead a lady who sells the time for a living. She is the second generation of her family who has had this curious privilege, which was granted originally to her father by the then Astronomer Royal in the year 1830, says London Answers.

She has about forty customers in different parts of London. She possesses a most marvelous old chronometer, made by Arnold, in 1835, for the Duke of Sussex, and each Monday morning goes to Greenwich and has her chronometer corrected, and gets an official document stating that it differs from mean time by so many seconds or tenths. Her customers correct their time accordingly.

It is an old saying that half the world doesn't know how the other half lives, and truly some of the methods employed to capture the elusive £. s. d. are strange in the extreme.

The other day a man appeared in court, requested compensation for injuries received in the course of his employment. Asked the nature of his work, he said that he got fifty-five shillings a week for standing in a barrel at fair grounds and letting people shy balls at his head.

Paris has a man who barks for a living. In Paris there is a tax of eight shillings a year on dogs, and the owners are supposed to declare them themselves. But many get out of this by tipping the concierge, or hall porter. So the authorities have found a man who can bark just like a dog, and are giving him six pounds a month to go round at night and bark outside each house, and when a dog replies, to send the name and address to the authorities. The two-legged dog also gets a small commission on each discovery, and does very well.

Speaking of Paris, did you ever hear of a "jambiste"? A "jambiste" is a young man, usually of good family, who attends dancing classes, and helps the master by acting as partner to pupils. He gets no salary, but sometimes meets a rich heiress and marries her.

In London is a man who deals in second-hand plateglass. He buys up broken windows, cut the remains into panes of smaller size, and finds a ready market for his wares.

There is another who patches wallpaper for a living. He is an artist in his way. Cutting a piece of blank paper to fit the damaged spot exactly, he pastes it on very carefully; then, using paints and brushes, colors it to match the ground of the other paper, and afterwards puts in the pattern so delicately that it is next to impossible to find the place where he has been at work.

A defendant in a case recently before the courts received a letter from a man who called himself "Ex-prisoner," offering, in exchange for a small sum of money or some cast-off clothing, to give the other instruction in the best methods of making himself comfortable in prison. "One tip," he wrote, "by means of which you will be able to obtain an improvement on the official dietary, you will consider to be well worth what my advice will cost you."

An advertisement in a London newspaper comes from a woman who may be known as a "professional baby-namer." She proclaims her willingness, for the sum of one shilling, to select a suitable name for the new arrival. She asks to know the child's sex, complexion, color of eyes, and date of birth, and guarantees to satisfy the parents.

To be a radium errand-girl is the ambition of certain young French women. Radium is so precious, and at the same time so dangerous if handled carelessly, that special messengers are employed to carry the little cases containing it from the laboratories to the hospitals. Girls are employed in preference to boys, and are paid as much as fifty shillings a week for their services.

An Essex man makes a living by cleaning incandescent gas-mantles. He travels from house to house, and uses a long soft brush, and then impregnates the mantles with a preservative solution.

In the streets we see many odd methods of gaining a few pence, but perhaps none more original than that of the old blind Austrian who used to haunt Fleet Street, playing tunes on his hands.

Arching his hands till the palms were quite rigid, he struck them smartly together, the contact evolving a note rather like that made by striking a metal bar with a leather-covered hammer. He knew all the operas, but usually confined himself to simple melodies, such as "Home, Sweet Home" and "God Save the King."

Card-Playing Queens.

Queen Elizabeth was fond of cards, but inclined to be peevish and lose her temper in the game. Mary, Queen of Scots, carried her infatuation to the extent of wagering her personal attire on the game. She would play continuously from Saturday to Monday and sacrifice her wardrobe if necessary to do so. Queen Anne of Austria had persistent ill luck, we are told, but "she played like a queen, without passion or greed." Anne Boleyn was an inveterate gambler, as were all the wives of Henry VIII., with one exception. Catherine of Aragon did not gamble. She had no love for the card table.—London Telegraph

KEEPING YOUNG

Cavalieri's Many Rules do not Provide for Existence.

Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the famous actress, has just declared that she will always remain young and beautiful. She simply believes that people need not grow old if they will only take a few elementary precautions. These "precautions" will be difficult to follow. For instance, we are told that the actress says it is not necessary to eat, since everything that a person eats injures the body. Butter fattens. Meat sets up cutaneous diseases. Fat makes the nose shine, cakes take the enamel off the teeth, fruit provokes disorders which have a bad effect on the complexion and fish is injurious. Just as it is dangerous to eat these things, so the person who desires to remain young and beautiful must not drink. There are other things which we are urged not to do. We must not shed tears. The tear is an extremely corrosive fluid which paves the way for furrows. We may display chagrin, but we must not weep. Nor must we laugh, for laughing enlarges the mouth. We may smile, for smiling shows ivory teeth, the triumph of nature and the dentist. Another rule for those who would keep young is not to walk in the open air. In summer the sun withers the complexion, and in winter the cold air damages the nose. Before going to bed at nights a woman is recommended to follow certain hygienic rules which are extremely rudimentary. She must not forget to place the nose in a mould in order to preserve the purity of the lines. In the morning, massage, lasting two hours, is recommended. Afterwards the chiropodist may operate for an hour and a half, followed by the manicurist. Then comes the professor of Swedish gymnastics, who will make you raise your arms and legs several times. Mme. Cavalieri in disclosing her secrets of health and beauty, does not say how those who are desirous of remaining young are to exist.

Baby Dreadful Sufferer. Could Not Keep Him from Scratching. Every Joint Affected. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and He is Well.

"Enclosed find my son's photo and I feel by writing these few lines to you I am only doing my duty, as my son was a dreadful sufferer from eczema. At the age of two weeks he began to get covered with red spots on his legs and groins, which mother thought was red gum or thrush; but day by day it grew worse until every joint and crevice were affected and baby started screaming for hours day and night, such a thing as sleep was out of the question. I took him to two of Sydney's leading doctors; one said it was one of the worst cases he had seen, the other did not think it so serious; one ordered ointment for rubbing in, the other a dusting powder. I followed their prescriptions for over four months and still baby kept getting worse. I could not keep him from scratching so great was his agony.

"When he was five months old I tried the Cuticura Remedies and I am very thankful to say my baby is to-day free from all his suffering. His groins were bleeding when I started and other parts affected were the lower part of his body under the knees, arms, in arm joints, eyebrows and neck; but after twice using Cuticura Ointment I began to see a difference and by the time I had used one tin, along with the bathing with Cuticura Soap, baby was nearly cured. I still kept on using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and now, thank goodness, he is quite well and, although he is now ten months old, has not had any further return of the trouble." (Signed) Mrs. G. Martin, 9 Knight St., Erskineville, Sydney, N.S.W., Mar. 31, 1911.

TAMING A TIGER

"Tatoo": More than Kindness to Tame a Beast

The girl looked sharply at the attendants that were in readiness outside the cage with forks and hot bars—the theory that wild beasts can be tamed by kindness is little more than theory—and deftly sliding back the catch of the inner door of the cage, stepped in to Malang Shah. He greeted her with a snarl that brought Monson's rifle to his shoulder in an instant. The girl approached him quietly. He stared uneasily, and shifted his position, crouching back with flattened ears. At about three yards away, the girl stopped, and began to talk softly to him. That was all she intended doing for some time, to accustom the tiger to her presence in the cage with him. The time for learning tricks would come later, when she had schooled him to endure the company of other tigers in the same cage.

But Malang Shah meant to make it difficult. In his heart he was afraid of her, but he could not realize it. He hesitated no more than a second, then dropped, and sprang, with a short ugly roar. The girl shifted slightly to one side, firing two blank cartridges full in the mad, furious face coming at her. Malang Shah stopped again in mid-spring, uttering a strangled snarl of surprise. The sudden flashes had confused him, and the smoke made his eyes smart. He crouched again.

A lean and snake-like thong hissed swiftly through the thin smoke and lashed him over the eyes; it came again and again, with sharp cracks almost as loud as the reports of the pistol. A quick, authoritative voice followed the cracks, and the whip curled round his hindquarters stingingly. He roared, leaping sideways, leaving the way back to the door clear. He gathered himself to spring again, but he saw that the girl was thrusting towards him that small glittering thing which had smitten those two bright, burning jets of fire, and he hesitated. Even as he hesitated the inner door of his cage clashed to again, and his chance—for the time—was gone. The girl was out of the cage again.

Slaney smiled across at Monson, who was very pale under his sunburn. Not once had the sights of the rifle expert been a fraction of an inch off the neck of the tiger. A bullet in the neck will stop any animal living—except the pachyderm—on the instant. It is the heart-shot that is uncertain for a few minutes.

"She's all right," said Slaney. "In a month's time she'll have him quiet like a calf."—Harmsworth Red Magazine.

CONSUMPTION OF BEER

An Austrian Paper Places the Total "Drinks" at Seven Billion Gallons.

"Gambrinus," the organ of the Austrian brewing and hop industry, is responsible for the statement that seven billion gallons of beer are consumed annually over the whole world. At least this is the estimated figure for 1910. According to the statistics gathered by the Austrian journal, the United States of America heads the list of beer-drinking countries with a yearly consumption of over sixteen million gallons. Germany is a close second with fourteen hundred and thirty millions, the product of thirteen thousand breweries. Bavaria is credited with drinking more than a quarter of the German output, brewed in four thousand eight hundred breweries.

Great Britain comes third on the list and not very far behind Germany. Its consumption is put at twelve hundred and forty million gallons. After these three countries there is a big drop, the fourth Austria-Hungary, drinking only five hundred and ten million gallons. Belgium and France come next with three hundred and fifty millions and three hundred and ten millions respectively, and considerably behind them is the great Empire of Russia with a hundred and ninety million gallons.

After these big figures, Denmark, Switzerland, and Sweden consume comparatively small quantities of beer, although not so small when the size of these countries is taken into consideration.

HOW CONSUMPTION RAVAGES QUEBEC

A Royal Commission Finds That Its Victims Include More Women Than Men.

One of the most valuable medical reports ever issued by a province of Canada is that of the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis in Quebec.

In the Province of Quebec the death-rate from tuberculosis is much higher than it is in Ontario and in the neighboring American States, and it is higher among the French-speaking population of the province than among the English-speaking residents of Quebec. It appears to the commissioners that the causes of this remarkable condition are found in the greater poverty of the French-Canadian population, the fact that they neglect or are ignorant of many of the simplest rules of health, and that they form the greater number of artisans and laborers and are thus more exposed to the unhygienic influences of industrial work. The English-speaking population, according to the report, fill the better industrial posts, are better paid in consequence, and live in healthier surroundings. The commissioners say that reform must proceed along the lines of attempting to improve the conditions of industrial work for the French-Canadians, and are disseminating among them a greater knowledge of the laws of health.

More Women Die Than Men.

Regarding the remarkable fact that in Quebec women fall more readily victims to the disease than men, the commissioners say that for the six Winter months the women of the province, as a rule, spend most of their time immured indoors, and to preserve warmth the houses are too frequently sealed against any fresh air. Even in the Summer it is the custom to keep the blinds down and the windows closed, in order to make the houses moderately cool. They mention the fact that the high birth rate among French-Canadian women may also be a factor, since, following childbirth, the resistance to infection of any sort is lowered. There is also to be considered the fact that the larger families of the French-Canadians makes necessary the huddling together of many persons in small rooms, a condition that is highly favorable to the development of the tubercle bacilli. More than twice as many French-Canadian women die of tuberculosis, according to population, as English women. Compared with the incidence of the disease in the male sex, that among the women is as 222 compared with 164.

Climate and Disease.

As regards the relation of climate to the disease, the commissioners find that, apart from the efforts of people keeping too much indoors, it is an insignificant one. The disease is slightly more prevalent in March than in any other month of the year, and is slightly less prevalent in September, October, November and December. They do not fail to point to the probability of the germs of the disease, which manifests itself in the Spring and Summer, having established themselves in the Winter months. Cold in itself is not more favorable to the growth of the bacilli than heat, and the report quotes approvingly the words of Dr. Trudeau, who says: "It is not so much where the consumptive lives as how he lives that is of the most importance." The climate of Quebec is not necessarily more favorable to the spread of the disease than that of British Columbia.

A Very High Death Rate.

Just how serious the problem of tuberculosis is for the Province of Quebec may be judged from the fact that one-third of all deaths in the province are attributed to it. It is more deadly than all other infectious diseases combined. Only infantile diarrhoea of all specific diseases commits greater ravages. In tuberculosis more than half the victims fall between the ages of 15 and 34, and more than one-third between the ages of 20 and 45. Only two States in the Union, which keep accurate records, have a higher death rate; that in Montreal is probably higher than any other city on this continent or in the British Isles, and in comparison with seventeen civilized countries, Quebec stands sixth as regards the death rate from tuberculosis. A first long stride toward improving her position has been made by the publication of the valuable report from which these facts are taken.

TRAGEDY OF THE POOR

Helpless Old Lady Fell in a Swoon And Was Mangled by Dogs.

A pitiful tragedy occurred in the beautiful gardens that encircle Prince Ruffo's villa on the Flaminian Way, outside the gates of Rome. A poor beggar woman on the verge of starvation ventured up the main walk to ask an alms at the brilliantly-lighted villa inside which Prince Ruffo was giving a grand dinner in honor of a professor newly nominated to the International Institute of Agriculture, adjoining the princely property. Thrust away with harsh epithets by merciless attendants, the poor woman was wending her way back towards the massive iron gates, when overcome with hunger and fatigue, she appears to have fallen into a swoon just outside the entrance. About midnight piercing shrieks and the barking of dogs brought the prince and a body of retainers outside with lanterns and revolvers in the belief that burglars were breaking into the palace. Soon, however, they came upon a scene of horror. A couple of furious mastiffs, let loose earlier in the evening had scented out and denuded the body of the woman, which they were then ferociously tearing to pieces. The unhappy victim, who was disabled through a severe fall some time ago, expired in the hospital the next day. She was 73 years of age.

That was all she intended doing for some time, to accustom the tiger to her presence in the cage with him. The time for learning tricks would come later, when she had schooled him to endure the company of other tigers in the same cage.

But Malang Shah meant to make it difficult. In his heart he was afraid of her, but he could not realize it. He hesitated no more than a second, then dropped, and sprang, with a short ugly roar. The girl shifted slightly to one side, firing two blank cartridges full in the mad, furious face coming at her. Malang Shah stopped again in mid-spring, uttering a strangled snarl of surprise. The sudden flashes had confused him, and the smoke made his eyes smart. He crouched again.

A lean and snake-like thong hissed swiftly through the thin smoke and lashed him over the eyes; it came again and again, with sharp cracks almost as loud as the reports of the pistol. A quick, authoritative voice followed the cracks, and the whip curled round his hindquarters stinglingly. He roared, leaping sideways, leaving the way back to the door clear. He gathered himself to spring again, but he saw that the girl was thrusting towards him that small glittering thing which had emitted those two bright, burning jets of fire, and he hesitated. Even as he hesitated the inner door of his cage clashed to again, and his chance—for the time—was gone. The girl was out of the cage again.

Slaney smiled across at Monson, who was very pale under his sunburn. Not once had the sights of the rifle expert been a fraction of an inch off the neck of the tiger. A bullet in the neck will stop any animal living—except the pachyderm—on the instant. It is the heart-shot that is uncertain for a few minutes.

"She's all right," said Slaney. "In a month's time she'll have him quiet like a calf."—Harmsworth Red Magazine.

CONSUMPTION OF BEER

An Austrian Paper Places the Total "Drinks" at Seven Billion Gallons.

"Gambrinus," the organ of the Austrian brewing and hop industry, is responsible for the statement that seven billion gallons of beer are consumed annually over the whole world. At least this is the estimated figure for 1910. According to the statistics gathered by the Austrian journal, the United States of America heads the list of beer-drinking countries with a yearly consumption of over sixteen million gallons. Germany is a close second with fourteen hundred and thirty millions, the product of thirteen thousand breweries. Bavaria is credited with drinking more than a quarter of the German output, brewed in four thousand eight hundred breweries.

Great Britain comes third on the list and not very far behind Germany. Its consumption is put at twelve hundred and forty million gallons. After these three countries there is a big drop, the fourth Austria-Hungary, drinking only five hundred and ten million gallons. Belgium and France come next with three hundred and fifty millions and three hundred and ten millions respectively, and considerably behind them is the great Empire of Russia with a hundred and ninety million gallons.

After these big figures, Denmark, Switzerland, and Sweden consume comparatively small quantities of beer, although not so small when the size of these countries is taken into consideration.

HOW CONSUMPTION RAVAGES QUEBEC

A Royal Commission Finds That Its Victims Include More Women Than Men.

One of the most valuable medical reports ever issued by a province of Canada is that of the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis in Quebec.

In the Province of Quebec the death-rate from tuberculosis is much higher than it is in Ontario and in the neighboring American States, and it is higher among the French-speaking population of the province than among the English-speaking residents of Quebec. It appears to the commissioners that the causes of this remarkable condition are found in the greater poverty of the French-Canadian population, the fact that they neglect or are ignorant of many of the simplest rules of health, and that they form the greater number of artisans and laborers and are thus more exposed to the unhygienic influences of industrial work. The English-speaking population, according to the report, all the better industrial posts, are better paid in consequence, and live in healthier surroundings. The commissioners say that reform must proceed along the lines of attempting to improve the conditions of industrial work for the French-Canadians, and are disseminating among them a greater knowledge of the laws of health.

More Women Die Than Men.

Regarding the remarkable fact that in Quebec women fall more readily victims to the disease than men, the commissioners say that for the six Winter months the women of the province, as a rule, spend most of their time immured indoors, and to preserve warmth the houses are too frequently sealed against any fresh air. Even in the Summer it is the custom to keep the blinds down and the windows closed, in order to make the houses moderately cool. They mention the fact that the high birth rate among French-Canadian women may also be a factor, since, following childbirth, the resistance to infection of any sort is lowered. There is also to be considered the fact that the larger families of the French-Canadians makes necessary the huddling together of many persons in small rooms, a condition that is highly favorable to the development of the tubercle bacilli. More than twice as many French-Canadian women die of tuberculosis, according to population, as English women. Compared with the incidence of the disease in the male sex, that among the women is as 223 compared with 164.

Climate and Disease.

As regards the relation of climate to the disease, the commissioners find that, apart from the efforts of people keeping too much indoors, it is an insignificant one. The disease is slightly more prevalent in March than in any other month of the year, and is slightly less prevalent in September, October, November and December. They do not fail to point to the probability of the germs of the disease, which manifests itself in the Spring and Summer, having established themselves in the Winter months. Cold in itself is not more favorable to the growth of the bacilli than heat, and the report quotes approvingly the words of Dr. Trudeau, who says: "It is not so much where the consumptive lives as how he lives that is of the most importance." The climate of Quebec is not necessarily more favorable to the spread of the disease than that of British Columbia.

A Very High Death Rate.

Just how serious the problem of tuberculosis is for the Province of Quebec may be judged from the fact that one-third of all deaths in the province are attributed to it. It is more deadly than all other infectious diseases combined. Only infantile diarrhoea of all specific diseases commits greater ravages. In tuberculosis more than half the victims fall between the ages of 15 and 34, and more than one-third between the ages of 20 and 45. Only two States in the Union, which keep accurate records, have a higher death rate; that in Montreal is probably higher than any other city on this continent or in the British Isles, and in comparison with seventeen civilized countries, Quebec stands sixth as regards the death rate from tuberculosis. A first long stride toward improving her position has been made by the publication of the valuable report from which these facts are taken.

TRAGEDY OF THE POOR

Helpless Old Lady Fell in a Swoon And Was Mangled by Dogs.

A pitiful tragedy occurred in the beautiful gardens that encircle Prince Ruffo's villa on the Flaminion Way, outside the gates of Rome. A poor beggar woman on the verge of starvation ventured up the main walk to ask an alms at the brilliantly-lighted villa inside which Prince Ruffo was giving a grand dinner in honor of a professor newly nominated to the International Institute of Agriculture, adjoining the princely property. Thrust away with harsh epithets by merciless attendants, the poor woman was wending her way back towards the massive iron gates, when overcome with hunger and fatigue, she appears to have fallen into a swoon just outside the entrance. About midnight piercing shrieks and the barking of dogs brought the prince and a body of retainers outside with lanterns and revolvers in the belief that burglars were breaking into the palace. Soon, however, they came upon a scene of horror. A couple of furious mastiffs, let loose earlier in the evening had scented out and denuded the body of the woman, which they were then ferociously tearing to pieces. The unhappy victim, who was disabled through a severe fall some time ago, expired in the hospital the next day. She was 73 years of age.

Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Hold Conference.

New York, Dec. 27.—Unless negotiations now being carried on in this city are successful, it is possible that passenger traffic for the Canadian West now coming to the port of New York will be diverted to other ports of the United States.

The Grand Trunk Railway System considers itself aggrieved because it cannot get the same terms for passengers to Winnipeg as are accorded to the Canadian Pacific, through the latter's connection with the New York Central's lines. Charles M. Hays is pushing the negotiations for his company and is said to have the backing of the various steamship companies arriving at this port.

The railroads west of Chicago are also favorable to the Grand Trunk view and other roads going out of New York are willing to co-operate, but the New York Central, which, so far, has, through its arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway, controlled this traffic, seems to be holding out against giving the Grand Trunk System any portion of this trade.

The Lehigh Valley connection of the Grand Trunk, with its 500 miles of double track leading out of New York City, could be utilized in carrying passengers to Chicago. Should the Trunk Line Association not meet the claims of the Grand Trunk, it is intimated that some of the steamship lines will land passengers at New London, Conn., where they will go west via Central Vermont direct over Grand Trunk lines to Chicago.

Big Lock-Out Inevitable.

Manchester, Eng., Dec. 27.—Nothing has happened to warrant the hope that the lock-out of 180,000 cotton workers in Lancashire can be averted. The lock-out is scheduled for today and officially both sides maintain an uncompromising attitude.

The weavers in the Heleae mill at Accrington went on strike Dec. 20 because of the employment of non-union labor. Two days later the committee of the Lancashire Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers' Association decided to lock-out the workers in all the mills belonging to the federation, as a protest against the action of trade unionists in trying to get weavers to join their union.

Yesterday was a general holiday and few cotton men remained in Manchester. It was impossible to obtain the views of a majority, but among some there is a disposition to refer the dispute to the industrial council, of which Sir George Askwith, the noted strike settler, is president.

The Federation of Master Cotton Spinners will meet here to-day and, it is expected, in the event of a general shutdown of the weaving sheds, that they will propose the early closing of the spinning mills in Lancashire.

Dined Together by Phone.

Denver, Colo., Dec. 27.—Although separated by 500 miles, Charles R. Anderson, a wealthy New York broker, and his wife enjoyed a Christmas dinner together by telephone. Mr. Anderson is at a Denver hotel and his wife in Salt Lake City, Utah. Telephones were placed at their respective dinner tables and waiters on extension telephones heard husband and wife order a menu together as if they had been sitting side by side. During the meal husband and wife kept up a constant conversation. Telephone charges brought the cost of the dinner up to $75.

Philip Gies, proprietor of the Peerless Leather Co., while overseeing some work yesterday was struck on the head with a piece of plank and became unconscious. He is improving, although not out of danger. His physician hopes for his recovery.

Took in the Situation.

"John, here are your slippers."

"Thank you."

"And your smoking jacket."

"How good you are!"

"And your pipe and tobacco."

"That's kind."

"And now sit down. Let me read the paper to you, for I know you're tired."

And then he looked inquiringly at her and said:

"Mollie, let's be perfectly candid with each other. What kind of a birthday present do you want?"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Merry Dumbbell Chime.

An attendant at an institute for the deaf and dumb was undergoing a rapid fire inquisition at the hands of a female visitor.

"But how do you summon these poor mutes to church?" she asked finally.

"By ringing the dumbbells, madam," retorted the exasperated attendant.—Exchange.

Could Be Spared.

Mrs. Hen was in tears. One of her little ones had been sacrificed to make a repast for a visiting clergyman.

"Cheer up, madam," said the rooster comfortingly. "You should rejoice that your son is entering the ministry. He was poorly qualified for a lay member anyhow."—People's Home Journal.

THE PRESIDENT'S WIFE.

Mrs. R. L. Borden Is Beloved For Her Personal Qualities.

The voice of Canada has spoken. At its bidding another figure steps forward to the helm of state, and with the coming into power of the new First Minister comes into prominence one who will play no mean part in the social life of the Dominion—that gracious and stately gentlewoman, his wife.

Mrs. Robert Laird Borden is already well known, as, like Lady Laurier, she has made it a point whenever possible to travel about with her husband on his political tours, and over her tact and charming personality have won many friends, not only for herself, but for her husband and his party. For she has always taken the keenest interest in his work, his lifework she has made hers also, his career has been her highest aim, and to his success she has contributed in no small degree. One may well be sure that no brusque speech, no ungracious bearing on her part will put difficulties in the party's way, or alienate from her husband any wavering supporter. She has been a helpmeet in the truest sense, and in many ways. For instance, she has the faculty of seldom forgetting a face. Now, as often happens with men who are burdened by the cares of a nation, the new Prime Minister is a trifle absent-minded, and often when greeting strangers Mrs. Borden will turn to her husband with "Oh, Rob! this is Mr. So-and-So; you remember we met him at such a place."

Then, too, she has made their beautiful home in the Capital City a rallying spot for Mr. Borden's followers, where they might feel perfectly at home, where a kindly and cordial welcome was assured to stranger and citizen alike, and where opportunity was given for townspeople and "sessional visitors" alike to become better acquainted.

As a hostess she is tactful, bright, and sympathetic, and she has that very happy faculty of blending into harmony the varied elements of an intricate social world. Indeed, if Mr. Borden but prove as successful in blending the inharmonious elements of his hitherto unruly party, Canada will have made no mistake in placing him, for a time, in control of her destinies.

The Ottawa residence of the new Prime Minister is situated on Wurtemburg street. A large, imposing stone building, vine-clad, with huge columned porte cocheres, and spacious, well-lighted rooms, it is set well back from the street, on a velvety lawn. Before Mr. Borden purchased it, some five years ago, it had been the home of Sir Charles Fitzpatrick. Its interior bears testimony to the artistic taste and love of brightness and sunshine which are characteristic of its mistress. But both Mr. and Mrs. Borden still cherish a fond love for "Pinehurst," their delightful Halifax home, situated on an arm of Halifax harbor, and overlooking some of the finest bits of scenery to be found in or about that quaint old city.

Mrs. Borden is very enthusiastic over outdoor sports and is no mean opponent at golf, in tennis, or at bowls. She is skilled also in music and in painting. Indeed, many of the pictures that hang upon the walls of her home are products of her own cleverly-wielded brush. One of her hobbies is photography, an art in which she has attained much proficiency. Her studies are well chosen and cleverly coruped, while some of her "snaps," especially those of her husband, are particularly happy. Then she does all the work herself, from the developing to the finishing.—Toronto Star Weekly.

Men Who Won't Work.

The claim is made in many Canadian cities that there are a certain class of man out of work who don't really want to get anything to do.

The Hamilton Herald a few days ago had occasion to find what truth there is in that claim so far as the Ambitious City is concerned.

It isn't because he can't get work that a man is idle these days, said The Herald in its issue of September 13. Gore Park and City Hall corner have the usual number of the old guard on the job these fall days, and the inference to be drawn from this occupation of outdoor seats in cold weather is that a man goes to such a public spot to find work. Yesterday a Herald employe was sent out to get a man to help him in unloading a lot of paper at The Herald warehouse. He went to Gore Park and the City Hall, where he offered 25 cents an hour for a whole day of easy work. There were no takers.

Those who held down the seats didn't even have the grace to cover their refusal to work with a kick about the money offered not being enough.

One man was "waiting for a friend"; another said: "That's not in my line, I'm a machinist." Others had equally poor excuses.

First Colonial Peer.

No one would accuse Lord Mount Stephen of advocating the American annexation of Canada, yet they say he declared himself in favor of reciprocity.

Lord Mount Stephen, who did some great railroad "stunts" in association with Lord Strathcona when they were Canadians known as George Stephen and Donald Smith, was the first person outside of the British Isles to be made a peer. He received his title in 1891, during the Premiership of Lord Salisbury. Two months later the widow of Sir John A. Macdonald was created a peeress in her own right as Baroness Macdonald of Earnscliffe. It was not until 1897, when Lord Salisbury was again Premier, that Lord Strathcona was raised from a baronetcy to a peerage.—Star Weekly.

Cutlery Family.

"I call 'em the cutlery family."

"Why so?"

"Well, the daughter spoons, the father forks out the money, and the mother knifes the other guests."

Peterboro Is Growing.

The assessor's returns shows Peterboro's population of 19,200 to be an increase of 2,377 over the year 1910.

Between Sir William Meredith and Labour Representatives

TORONTO, ONT., DEC. 27.—Several stiff passages at arms occurred between Sir William Meredith and representatives of the labour organizations when they presented a resolution embodying their views of what the Workmen's Compensation Act should be. His Lordship listened attentively throughout. His remarks to the effect that the workmen should be educated to take care of themselves and of the lives of their fellow workers, led to some warm passages.

Some of the labour men received a severe rebuke from his Lordship for their random statements.

A PARABLE UPON THE POWER BY-LAW OF JANUARY 1st

John Blank, a Peterborough gentleman, employs a solicitor to look after his business interests.

The solicitor, Richard Roe, learns that his client wants a house built.

He summons Mr. Blank to his office, and says to him:

"I understand that you want a house built?"

"Yes, I want one built as reasonably as possible, and one to suit me and my wife."

"Well," says the solicitor, "here's your chance. But you must be careful. If you say 'Yes' to my question, "Are you in favour of entering into a contract through me to build you a house?" the matter is settled."

"There doesn't seem to be anything wrong with that; you will attend to the details and when the plans are prepared and the contract ready, I will see if they suit me; if they do you can go on with the work."

"But you don't understand the situation. If you say 'Yes,' to my question, then you are out of the deal. The law gives me power to go on and make a contract and at any cost without consulting you or saying 'By your leave,' and you must foot the bill."

"Why, that's absurd; I'd be a fool to do business that way. You don't catch me putting my neck into a noose like that. It wouldn't be business. I'll say 'Yes,' all right but only on the condition that you are to submit the plans and contract to me before you commit me to an expenditure that may be a burden on me all my life."

"But, you don't understand, Mr. Blank," says the solicitor; "Those are the only terms I have to submit to you. I won't make any promise about the submitting the plans or contract to you; you must trust me to do the right thing and give me full power to do as I like in regard to building your house."

"Not by a— not much. I'm not quite a fool. I employ you to do my business but it must be done as I want it done. I want the deciding voice. I am not a bank and won't give you power to put a big debt upon me. If you will only make it a condition of my saying 'Yes,' that I shall have a chance to say whether the contract suits me, and to say if I am willing to meet the expense, I'd say yes, with all my heart. But I won't tie myself hands and feet down like that. I want the deciding say in the matter. I want to do business on business principles. If you won't trust me, who have to pay, I won't trust you; won't give you the power to make me pay without giving me a voice in the matter."

"Very well, Mr. Blank. I'm afraid you think you know what you want and what you can pay better than I do."

"You're right, I do—Good Day."

The above is an exact parallel to the blind power by-law.

If the people vote "Yes," to the question "Are you in favour of making a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission?" then the Hydro law permits the city council of next year or any other year to enter into any contract they my choose to do, incur any indebtedness they choose, without consulting the people.

Hydro-Electric power on its merits is not the question. The question is are the people to be committed to a contract that may involve, and at the very best is bound to involve, a big indebtedness, without a chance to approve or disapprove?

The people have to pay; the people should have the say. The objection to that bylaw is that the people who have to foot the bill will be shut out, if they pass it. The law empowers the council to enter into a contract that will at the lowest estimate add hundreds of thousands to the debt of the city;

To develop power for which we have no immediate prospect of use, will be to have a good deal of it lying idle, but the interest on the bonds, the levy of taxes, will still go on; they won't lie idle like the power for which we may have no use.

And all this without the consent of the people, asked and given.

If the people should be given a chance and should approve of a contract to develop power, that would be all right. They would be exercising their right of choice.

But to force them to pay without a say is not British fair play.

Give the people a guarantee that they will be allowed to decide upon any contract that may be made, and there will not be an opposing vote.

If Hydro-Electric power will be so cheap (counting the cost) as it is claimed it will be, why then is not some attempt made to show this?

If it will be as cheap as it is claimed it will be, why refuse to allow the ratepayers to pronounce upon the contract that may be made?

If it is good, they will approve it.

But in any event, the ratepayers should have a chance to give their opinion, and this the "Yes" or "No" bylaw does not give.

A NARROW ESCAPE IN BAD BLAZE

Strathcona Hotel at Brockville Destroyed With a Loss of $70,000 --Business Section Threatened

GUESTS ESCAPED

BROCKVILLE, ONT., DEC. 27. — By the tremendous efforts of the firemen and citizens, the main business section of this town was saved from a fire which this morning completely destroyed the Strathcona hotel, with a loss of some seventy thousand dollars in building and contents. Fifteen guests and number of hotel employees had narrow escapes from flames and stifling smoke. The fire was discovered by the night clerk and bell boy at five o'clock this morning when smoke was noticed issuing from the laundry in the basement. All the inmates got out with their belongings in good time, except Police Magistrate Clarke, of Cardinal, Ont., who was found wandering around the second storey by the firemen some time later and carried down the lader in a half-dazed condition. Fanned by the heavy wind, it looked as if the fire would wipe out the best part of the business district, but fortunately, the heavy rain helped the fire fighters and eventually it was got under control. The Strathcona hotel was built in 1901, and is owned at present by the Brockville Loan and Savings Co. It was leased by George Brown. The insurance will be thirty-five thousand dollars.

JUMPED FROM TRAIN TO RESCUE TWO BOYS WHO WERE DROWNING

J. L. Primeau, Related to Local People and Well Known Here is Central Figure in a Thrilling Incident at Lindsay---Is in Line for a Suitable Recognition for Bravery

Christmas morning Mr. J. L. Primeau saved the lives of two boys from drowning, and incidentally earned a Carnegie hero medal, as well as recognition from the Royal Humane Society for his daring bravery.

It appears that during the morning two young sons of Mr. and Mrs. W. Ware, Russell street, wandered down to the river, where the footbridge crosses the river at the foot of Bidout street. One of the youngsters had his sleigh and the other wore his skates. Out on the river they stepped, which was covered only by a thin coating of ice, and instantly they broke through. The C. P. R. mixed from Toronto was coming along the river front, and one of the crew noticed the youths in the river. He thought they were standing on the bottom and paid very little attention to them. Mr. J. L. Primeau, who was on the train, in company with his brother, Aloysius, was quick to observe that the two boys were drowning, and were making a frantic struggle with death. Mr. Primeau immediately leaped from the train and ran down to the river bank. Throwing off his coat and discarding his boots he bravely jumped into the icy waters, and, after a heroic struggle, succeeded in rescuing the two boys, and pushed them up on the ice to safety. They were in an exhausted condition, and Mr. P. Burke, who happened on the scene, threw his overcoat over them until a doctor was summoned. The little lads were in a terrible condition, and were immediately taken to their home. There they are none the worse to-day for their experience, but it is needless to say they will always remember Christmas Day, 1911.

Mr. J. L. Primeau, who made the daring rescue, had a hard fight in the icy waters. His hands were out and hacked by the ice, and his body was benumbed with the cold. It was indeed a brave act on his part, and the attention of the Royal Humane Society, as well as the Commission in connection with the Carnegie Hero Fund will, it is understood, be directed to his act with a view to securing suitable recognition.—Lindsay Post.

Mr. J. L. Primeau is well known in Peterborough, being a visitor to this city quite frequently. He is a cousin of Mr. Charles Primeau, the well-known George Street optician.

ALD. DUNCAN SAYS SUPPORT THE BY-LAW

Dear Sir,—Do not the ratepayers see where the opposition to the Hydro-Electric power vote is coming from? Money is being expended in opposing the vote. Only the power monopoly interests would spend money for this purpose. The people, I hope, will not be influenced by the power interests to vote against the interests of the city and all in it who use light or power.

The monopoly can have clever articles written and published. They have plenty of money to do it with. The trust is one backed by millions, and can pay for the best lawyers and other assistants to put up a fight for them.

But the question is so plain that no one should be misled.

In whose hands do the ratepayers think their power and light interests will be safer—in the hands of the power monopoly or of the people's Commission and Council? The power monopoly want to hold the whole market for themselves. They have gobbled the power sites and other companies for this purpose. If they can hold the market, they will compel the people to take light and power from them only, and reap handsome profits on their millions at the expense of the people.

The Hydro-Electric Commission is the people's Commission. It does not, and no member of it does, make or lose a cent whether the people take power from it or not. It exists only to serve the people.

By the power vote on New Year's Day, the ratepayers will say either that they will ask the aid of their own Commission, the Hydro-Electric, or that they will be content to remain in the hands of the power monopoly, which is spending money to hold them in its clutches.

Yours truly,
Geo. H. Duncan.

Presentation To Teacher

Mr. Stinson Honoured by Pupils of Coldsprings School

After the closing exercises on Friday afternoon the scholars of the Coldsprings school presented their teacher with a pair of gold cuff links and the following address:

Coldsprings, Otonabee,
Dec. 22, 1911.

Dear Mr. Stinson,—As we are about to close our school for the Christmas vacation (which is the happiest time of the year, when all hearts are filled with joy and gladness) we could not let the opportunity pass without showing to you our hearty appreciation of the kindness which you have shown us, not only as a 'Dear Teacher' but as a dear friend.

You not only taught us our daily lessons, but have shown us a bright example which we might well follow.

We, therefore, ask you to accept this small present not for its value alone, but for the spirit in which we give it, and we trust it will always remind you of the happy days we spent together.

Wishing you a Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year.

Signed on behalf of the scholars of Coldsprings School.

James Huston read the address and Marie Shaughnessy made the presentation. The teacher expressed himself as genuinely surprised, and then thanked the scholars for their most acceptable gift.

PRESSURE ON A NERVE

Nerves may be pressed on in consequence of a number of diseased conditions, or as the result of some accident. Enlarged glands in the armpit, for example, are apt to compress the large nerves which supply the arm; dislocated or broken bones are also liable to set up symptoms due to nerve pressure. Among the commonest causes are the pressure of crutches, or pressure on nerves of the arm during heavy sleep when the weight of the body has been thrown on the limb. This gives rise to the sensation familiarly known as "pins and needles" in the surface parts supplied by the nerve. This well recognized sensation indicates nerve pressure from any cause, and is followed by a tingling and numbness; which does not pass away as in the case where the pressure is due only to accident as when we lie on an arm or sit on a foot, if the pressure is continued more or less paralysis may follow. The cause of pressure may sometimes be removed, but naturally this is a matter which only a doctor can decide.

FAMOUS TREE DIES.

The famous chestnut tree du Vingt Mars in the Tuileries Gardens of Paris—famous because it was always the first of the year to burst into bloom—is dead. Strange to say it will not be cut down in regard especially to the tradition which has it that the poor Swiss soldiers who died in heroic defence of the French monarchs on August 10, 1792, die buried at its foot. —From the Queen.

So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When Duty whispers low, "Thou must,"
The youth replies, "I can"
—Emerson.

BROUGHT CHEER TO MANY HOMES

King's Daughters Left Good Things With Sixty-five Different Homes in the City

THANK THE PUBLIC

The Kings Daughters wish to thank all those who so kindly contributed and made it possible for them to send Christmas cheer into sixty-five homes during the past week, an increase of fifteen over any previous year. There was a most generous response to their appeal, twenty-seven people having sent contributions of groceries, sweets, fruit, toys, etc., and twelve contributing money, which was laid out to supplement what was required to make the baskets attractive as well as useful.

A POINT OF HONOUR.

The Toronto News and other Conservative journals are discussing a really indiscussable question, the question of the return of Hon. G. P. Graham ot a seat in the House of Commons for South Renfrew, without opposition, in compliance with the terms of an exploit agreement between the prominent local men of the Conservative and Liberal parties. It may not be a legally enforceable agreement, but it is as binding upon honourable men as a signed and sealed contract. The Conservative party has profited by it, and to that extent endorsed the agreement. In conformity with it, Dr. McGarry, a Conservative, was given, unopposed, a seat in the Ontario Legislature. It was further recognised when the Speaker of the House, with a knowledge of the reasons for his retirement, accepted the resignation, Mr. Low, the sitting Commons member for South Renfrew. There is not much doubt that, in the event of Mr. Graham contesting the seat, he would be returned, for Mr. Low was elected in September by, under the circumstances, the exceedingly large majority of 619. But, that is not the point. The question is that, even if the arrangement was not strictly in accord with the spirit of representative institutions, there should be honour among politicians, even as there is said to be honour among thieves.

BLOCKING A NATURAL TRADE.

An official report from Ottawa says that the total import and export trade of Canada last year increased by over $76,000,00, as compared with the year before. The same report states that the increase with the United States alone amounted to sixty-one and one-half million, or within fourteen and one-half millions of the total increase. The increase with the United States, according to these figures, was more tahn four times as great as the increase with all other countries combined, including Great Britain.

This is a marvellous showing. It is all the more marvellous when the accompanying facts are taken into account. Our exports to Great Britain enter that country absolutely free of toll. Our exports to the United States are heavily taxed on entering the American market. On manufactured imports we charge a considerably lower rate of duty on goods coming from Great Britain than we do on those coming from the United States. And still our aggregate trade with the United States increased by sixty-one and one-half million dollars last year while that with Great Britain increased by only, $2,000,000. An eminent authority has very wisely said that "Any tendency in trade to take a certain course is proof that it ought to take that course."

This statement is true in a general sense; it is especially true when we find trade over-leaping artificial barriers as it does in the case of commerce between Canada and the United States.

The facts are respectfully commended to those who thought they were doing a wise thing for Canada's economic future when they blocked Reciprocity.—Weekly Sun.

THE POWER QUESTION BY-LAW.

There is some disposition to think that the passing of the blind power by-law will lead to force the Seymour Power Company to lower their prices —"to break the monopoly".

No company can live and sell power at a loss, and neither the Seymour Power Company, nor any other company will sell power at a loss.

Nobody with authority, say the City Council, has asked the Seymour Power Company to make a bid for supplying power; no effort has been made to get their prices. So that we don't know whether we shall get cheaper power from the Hydro-Electric than we can do from a private company.

It is a fact that Peterborough gets and can get, power more cheaply than seven-eighths of the towns and cities getting their supply from the Hydro-Electric Commission.

Our lighting contract is now as favourable as that of any town, or city, in the Province, and we have an absolute guarantee, embodied in the contract, that the price will never be any higher. The price is under the control of the Ontario Municipal and Railway Board.

We can get power from the Seymour Power Company now, at a reasonable rate, as we need it, and to be paid for only when used.

We have 2000 h.p. available in Peterborough, at a reasonable rate. If we should get power much more cheaply what use have we for it?

We could not use it for city lighting, for we have a five-year contract on our hands now.

There is no necessity for Mr. Beck to come here to tell us the benfits of Hydro-Electric power.

What is wanted is a concise, business-like and definite statement of the terms on which Peterborough can get power.

If we can get it as cheaply as Mr. Beck will, no doubt, assure us we can, we want it, and will insist upon it.

We should have definite information before asking the people to say that they want Hydro-Electric power. The by-law is asking them to vote for—what, they do not know—for power to permit the Council to bind the ratepayers of the city to a large expenditure without consulting them, and without any assurance in the way of figures, or estimates, to show what they will be getting.

If the scheme of the City Council is to be taken on its merits, why should Hon. Mr. Beck come here to advocate it?

No ratepayer in Peterborough objects to getting Hydro-Electric power.

The objection is to the demand that the ratepayers put themselves in the hands of the Council, to give the Council authority to make a contract without allowing the people to pronounce upon it—to approve, or disapprove, of it, as they should have the chance to do, for they have to bear the burden of what indebtedness the contract may involve.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday afternoon, 20th December, at the home of Mrs. McQuade, Sturgeon Street, when her youngest daughter, S. Gertrude, was united in marriage to Mr. Robert H. Williamson. Rev. R. Burns performed the ceremony in the presence of only the immediate relatives and a few friends of the bride and groom. Promptly at four o'clock, to the strains of the Wedding March, played by Miss Florence Williamson, sister of the groom, the bride, looking very lovely in a gown of white silk embroidered net over taffeta silk, and wearing a filmy veil, caught with a coronet of orange blossoms, entered the drawing-room on the arm of her brother, Mr. Wallace McQuade of Edmonton. At the conclusion of the ceremony ,the guests repaired to the dining-room, where an evening dinner was served, the bride's table being prettily decorated with roses and carnations. A toast was proposed in honour of the bride by Rev. R. Burns. Mr. and Mrs. Williamson left on the 8.30 train amid a shower of confetti and rice for Kingston, Sharbot Lake, and other eastern points. The bride travelled in a very handsome brown tailored suit with toque to match, trimmed with heavy Oriental banding. Numerous costly and useful presents, among which were several substantial cheques, testified to the high esteem in which the young couple are held.

On Sunday evening the service at the Methodist Church was chiefly musical in its character. Two anthems and an opening carol by the choir were greatly appreciated, as was also a trio by the Misses Wilson, Parsons and Burns ("Sing, Sweet Stars," by Lorenz). Mrs. Bryson sang "The Star of Bethlehem" in her usual clear, sweet style. The pastor, Rev. R. Burns, gave a short sermon bearing on Christmas. At the conclusion of the service an organ recital was given by the organist, Miss Ivory, for which almost the entire congregation remained. Her numbers, which were given in a pleasing manner, showed the marvellous depth and sweetness of the organ. Her closing number, the "Hallelujah" Chorus from the "Messiah," was especially enjoyed by the congregation.

Mr. Jack Martin of Ottawa was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. Shield over the holiday.

Mrs. J. A. Wylie and Miss Shelma of Toronto were visiting friends here over Christmas.

Mr. Albert Stinson has taken over the meat shop previously owned by Mr. Wm. Earle.

On Monday evening the annual Christmas concert was held in Coronation Hall under the auspices of the L.O.L. Rev. Dr. Currie made an excellent chairman, introducing each artist in an able, happy manner. Among the outside talent, Mr. Kelly, with his talking dolls, met with enthusiastic applause, his ventriloquism benig very cleverly done. Mr. Kelly departed somewhat from his usual line and gave as a monologue Whitcomb Riley's popular poem, "An Old Sweetheart of Mine," which was greatly enjoyed. Mr. Robt. Wilson, with his Harry Lauder and other humourous selections, was insistently encored, his first number, "The Twelfth of July," meeting with especial favour. The accompanist, Miss Grace Bonnick gave two instrumental solos, the last being a medley of old familiar airs with variations. Two popular local soloists, Miss Lila Parsons and Miss Stella Wilson, took part in the programme, their selections meeting with the approval of the audience, as was evinced by the hearty demand for an encore. Miss Amy Parsons was pianist. Mr. Jos. Beatty moved a hearty vote of thanks to those who had taken part in the programme, and the concert was closed with "God Save the King."

A meeting of the ratepayers has been called for Friday evening in Coronation Hall to discuss the question of a free library. It is to be hoped that there will be a full attendance, as this is a most important question and worthy the serious consideration of every citizen.

WOMEN ARE KNIGHTS.

It is not at all well known that knighthood has constantly been conferred upon woman. Many English women received the accolade, and many more were members of such knightly orders as the Garter and St. John. When Mary Cholmondeley, "the bold lady of Cheshire," was knighted by Elizabeth for "her valiant address," on the queen taking the command at the threatened invasion of Spain, did she know that a whole city of Spanish women, the gallant women of Tortosa, had been knighted for saving that city from the Moors? Mary and Elizabeth had both been knighted at their coronation; but by the time Anne, the second Mary and Victoria ascended the throne it had been quite forgotten that according to English law and use a woman who filled a man's office acquired all its privileges and was immune from none of its duties.—London Graphic.

Wm. Langford Jr.

For North Ward Alderman

To The Ratepayers—

I am in favour of The Hydro Electric bylaw, but if elected will support only such a proposition as will give the city the lowest possible rates for power & light.

The city's interest will be looked after to the best of my ability and its affairs managed as economically as possible consistent with the progress of the city. 5d-148

Yours Respectfully,

Wm. Langford Jr.

Card From Ex-Alderman Gillespie

Centre Ward

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough.

Ladies and Gentlemen—

Having been again urged by a large number of ratepayers interested in the welfare of the city, I have consented to accept the nomination for Alderman for 1912.

My previous record in the Council is known to you all. If again honoured with your confidence I will endeavour to render such efficient service as will contribute to the best interests of the city irrespective of wards or boundaries.

As my business engagements will not permit me to personally interview the Electors, I take this means of soliciting your votes and influence.

Yours respectfully,

Geo. A. Gillespie

Dec. 26, 1911.

Johnston

For North Ward

After an absence of three years from the council, I again present myself as a candidate for aldermanic honours. If elected I will serve the city to the best of my ability. There are important matters before the people, and with my previous experience I will be in a position to give these questions good intelligent consideration. Wishing the electors a Happy New Year. 5d-148

MORROW

For Centre Ward

For the first time I present myself as a Candidate for election to the Council of the city.

I hope to receive a fair measure of support such as is freely accorded a new man, and new candidate.

If elected I will serve the city just as faithfully and as well as I can, never forgetting what is best for it and its people.

Time will not permit of a personal canvass, but I ask for support.

Yours Respectfully,

5d-148 Ladies & Gentlemen.

W. G. MORROW

VOTE TO RE-ELECT JOS. R. METHERAL in CENTRE WARD

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

I have been entrusted with your confidence for the past three years and my record stands open before you. It may show no extraordinary ability, but an endeavour to be straight-forward and honest in all dealings. I have not been swayed by cliques or outside influences, but voted and worked at all times in the interests of the ratepayers in general and will continue to do so in the future, if re-elected. I would advise the electors to vote for the Hydro-Electric Commission Power By-law. I firmly believe that the Hydro-Electric Commission will give Peterborough power at rates considerably reduced from those at present in force, but I pledge myself that no contract for power either with the Hydro-Electric Commission or private corporation shall be signed by the City Council without a By-law to that effect being submitted to the ratepayers.

Wishing you all the Compliments of the Season.

G. N. GORDON

FOR ALDERMAN

CENTRE WARD

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CENTRE WARD.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

As a candidate for Alderman for one of the two seats in the Centre Ward I respectfully solicit your votes.

My platform is briefly this:

1. Obtain Hydro-Electric estimates and reports as to prices, terms, etc., of obtaining power for the city's manufacturers, and for house and store lighting.

2. Abate the nuisance caused by the G. T.R. using Bethune St. as a shunting yard, which injuriously affects hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of realty.

3. Obtain legislation allowing reduction of taxes on businesses and improvements and increasing taxation of land values, thus making the holders of vacant land pay their share of taxes.

4. Have every milk-vendor's milk inspected at least fortnightly and a report with the milkman's name published, showing the proportions of butter fat contained in each lot.

5. Consideration of the question of permanent improvement of highways.

6. Begin an aggressive campaign to obtain new industries and inaugurate a strong publicity scheme.

There are two Aldermen to be elected for the Centre Ward. G. A. Gillespie is contesting one seat with J. R. Metheral, and W. G. Morrow, of Charlotte St., is contesting the other seat with me.

If elected, I will energetically support a progressive campaign for the city's advancement.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I am, yours faithfully,

G. N. GORDON.

Dec. 26, 1911.

VOTE FOR

EX-ALDERMAN J. J. DUFFUS

IN THE WEST WARD

To the Ratepayers of the West Ward and Peterborough Citizens in general:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—Having the honour of being duly nominated and urged by a large number of representative citizens to be a candidate in the West Ward, I have decided to again enter the Aldermanic field. As it will be impossible for me to interview each voter, I hereby most respectfully solicit your support and influence to assure my election.

If you so honour me I will pledge myself to do my utmost to assist in executing the city's business in a prudent and business like manner.

New industries, to my mind, is the one essential toward the future growth and success of our city, and I am in favour of a vigorous campaign to obtain cheap power and light, and also to induce the Radial Railway Co. to make extensive extensions. I would like to see the centre of our city with a permanent roadway.

I am opposed to the policy of increasing a man's taxes every time he makes improvements and minor extensions, and would support a measure to eliminate this condition of affairs.

Wishing all a bright and prosperous New Year.

Yours very respectfully,

JOS. J. DUFFUS

4d-140.

Your Vote and Influence is solicited in favour of

Ald. Edgar for the West Ward

In support of the Hydro-Electric Commission By-law and the efficient and economical management of the city's affairs.

Wishing you all the compliments of the season. 5d-148

"BISCUITS" WON QUESTIONABLE MATCH

NEW YORK, DEC. 26.—The much-heralded wrestling bout between Zbysko, th Polish wrestler, and Raicevich, the Italian champion, broke up in a muddle at Madison Square Garden last night. Most of the four thousand spectators left the Garden, thinking that the Italian had won, but the referee, Tom Jenkins, awarded the decision to Zbysko.

The Polish wrestler had agreed to throw Raicevich three times in 90 minutes. It took 37 minutes and 50 seconds to secure the first fall, which was by a forward double-arm hold.

After a ten-minute interval the men stepped to the mat again with a large majority of the house applauding the Italian. Referee Jenkins cautioned the men not to get off the mat. After 3 minutes and 33 seconds' wrestling Raicevich got just such a hold on the Pole as he had been floored with in the first half. One shoulder, however, was off the mat, and Jenkins tapped the top man with the idea of giving warning for him to get his man on the mat. He said he fairly shouted the warning but the great uproar from the crowd may have drowned it out, and in the midst of the applause the Italian jumped up and ran to his dressing room. The crowd, thinking that the Italian had won, moved out of the Garden without hearing the announcement of the referee that Raicevich had not got his man altogether on the mat and therefore there was no course to take but to award the decision to Zbysko.

It was announced earlier that Gotch, the world's champion, would meet the winner of last night's bout in the near future.

Will Try To Organize Canadian League Team

Abbie Johnston Here

During the next few days the question of whether or not Peterborough will have a team in the Canadian Baseball League, will be definitely settled. To-day Abbie Johnston, manager of the Guelph team last season, arrived in the city to try to arrange for the formation of a team here. It is not considered that there will be any difficulty in securing a franchise; the only question is, whether or not the necessary financial backing will be forthcoming. Mr. Johnston is an old Eastern League player with a lot of experience in the game, and he would be willing to take up the managership and assist in the organization of a Peterborough team. He is going into the matter with some of the leading business men and further details will be given to-morrow.

Twenty-one Former Champions Of The Ring Still Alive

There are at least 21 men living who have held championship of the ring and five of them still wear the creats of title. The heavyweight class has the greatest number of former champions, six, and the lightweight class has five men who have had their hand raised by a referee as the winner in a fight for the crown.

Paddy Ryan is now a policeman, a credit to the forces of the law John L. Sullivan, who beat Ryan, has retired wealthy from the stage; Jim Corbett, the cleverest of all the big men, is an actor; Robert Fitzsimmons has a farm at Dunnelen, N. J., but he has made his earnings from an act in vaudeville. Jim Jeffries is rich and spends most of his time in hunting and fishing. Jack Johnston, the present champion, is the only title holder now out of the United States, but he calls Chicago his home, and was born in the United States.

In the middleweight class there are three men alive who have held the title. Fits has been mentioned, O'Brien, "Philadelphia Jack" is in Philadelphia, while Billy Papke has announced his retirement from the ring.

The welterweight class has three former champions living. Harry Lewis is regarded as the best of the present lot. He never won the title, but it has just drifted to him, as did the featherweight robes to Abe Attell, Joe Walcott is in Boston, Money Melody has a drug store and still fights. Joe Thomas is trying to fight his way back to the top of the ladder.

The lightweight class has five men who are alive and have won the title. Jack McAuliffe is an actor. "Kid" Lavinge has a cafe in this city, and Frank Erne has a school of boxers in Paris. Battling Nelson is touring the country and taking every match he can get.

Ad. Wolgast the champion, is in a hospital in Los Angeles, from an operation, and he will not pull on a glove for six months.

Cal McCarthy hangs out in Troy, N. Y., and he is one of the four featherweights who have won crowns, Terry McGovern is in New York, as is Young Corbett.

No Permit For Cote

The O. H. A. executive has refused to grant Leo Cote a permit to play with the Lindsay intermediate team. The only town in which Cote can play is Oshawa. The following letter was received from Secretary Hewitt this morning:

Mr. R. Burke, Sec. Lindsay Hockey Club.

Dear Sir.—The O. H. A. executive does not intend to issue any permits this season, so it would be a waste of time on your part to make application for a certificate for Mr. Leo Cote. — W. A. Hewitt, Sec. O. H. A.—Lindsay Warder.

HOCKEY

An invitation has been extended to the Parkdale Club of Toronto, senior O.H.A. runners up to play in Boston on New Year's night, and though the team will probably make the trip, the indications are that the first time they will see the interior of a rink this season will be when they file into the Hub's handsome Arena. Physically the players are in good shape, having been trained vigorously both out and indoors, but naturally they are hardly fitted for a strenuous battle.

Considerable interest is being manifested in New York in the visit of the McGill hockey team, which will meet the Crescent Athletic Club seven at St. Nicholas Rink on Friday evening. The McGills will be the first Canadian team to visit New York this year, and they have quite a following in New York. The Crescent team is in good shape and has had a lot of practice on the artificial ice, while the Canadian team has been handicapped by the mild weather here. Canadians in New York are hopeful, however, that the Montreal boys will be able to win out at their own game.

The O.H.A. official rule book is at hand, and is as usual, a very complete little manual. A full account of the last annual meeting is given, along with a lot of other useful information on the progress of the organization. The book also contains the schedules of the different groups, which are always very useful, along with the names of the various club secretaries.

All hockey players in the city, both intermediate and junior, are requested to be at the Y.M.C.A. to-night for the usual workout in the gymnasium. The juniors will have to play here a week from to-morrow night, and they will have to go into the game without practice, so that every one who expects a place will have to be out to-night and Friday night at the Y. M. C. A. It looks as if the weatherman is going to send along something a little more seasonable, but there is no possibility of ice before Saturday night, at least, so that the "gym" work is all the more important.

COURAGE.

Of all the boons the Gods can give,
This one I ask, and ask in vain.
Well satisfied if I might live
My life, as it was lived, again.

[redacted]
Its faults and failures I confess,
Of cares and griefs its ample store;
From evils past I shrink the less,
As dreading future ills the more.

And yet this were the coward's part;
"Go forward" — there's our duty clear;
The humble and the constant heart
Knows not ingratitude or fear.

For this were men's most shameful lot
To lie in an unhonoured grave,
Ev'n those who loved him daring not
To claim for him that he was brave.

Reginald Lucas, in the Westminster Gazette.

Baseball News

How to spend the few months which intervene between the close of one baseball season and the beginning of the next no longer affords a perplexing problem for the stars of the diamond. The stage is opening its arms wider every year and extending a welcome that ball players are showing unusual eagerness to accept. Heading the list of ball player acts which will be exploited during the winter is a company made up of three Athletic pitchers and the Pearl Sisters. The baseball stars in the company are no less renowned diamond heroes than Jack Coombs, Chief Bender, and "Cy" Morgan. This trio was signed up several months ago at a time when Detroit was making a runaway race in the American League pennant chase, but more recent developments have only added strength to the drawing powers of the diamond warriors, and it will certainly draw down a much larger weekly stipend than it promised at that time. The promoter of the act expects steady booking until next spring's training trip calls away its baseball trio. The price asked for the act is $2,000 weekly. Wherever the act appears a bet will be offered to the house managers that the ball players will receive more publicity than all the rest of the bill combined, and no body is barred in the make-up of the supporting bill. The act will be called "Learning the Game," and the players are advertised to appear in the same uniforms that they wear in the world's series. Kathryn Pearl and Violet Pearl, who will head the act, have been rehearsing with the ball players, and they are confident that the sketch will be a winner. Coombs and Bender are strangers to the stage, but not so with Morgan. He is known as the "Minstrel Man of the Diamond," and is as much a veteran behind the spotlights as in the pitcher's box. He has worked in other off-seasons as a singer. Morgan has spent much time in preparing his pitching mates for their parts, and it is said that Coombs has shown unexpected stage ability. Bender's chief stock-in-trade, so far, has been his famous smile. But Morgan believes that Bender will yet make an actor. Immediately after Coombs defeated Mathewson at the Polo Grounds two vaudeville agents approached him at the Hotel Somerset with propositions to break away from the act for which he was rehearsing, and join another. It was stipulated that Bender and Morgan could come along, also. A larger salary was offered in each case, but Coombs turned both down. This act of Coombs recalls an incident of a year ago, after Coombs had three times defeated the Chicago Cubs and thus brought the world's championship to Philadelphia. He was offered a contract calling for $800 per week over one of the burlesque circuits during the entire winter, but he turned it down because he had given his word to a Cuban promoter to make a trip to Havana for $800 and expenses.

Rube Marquard of the Giants is another ball tosser who is slated to try for fame behind the footlights. Rube is scheduled to do a monologue which will deal with baseball, particularly with his part in the world's series.

Mike Donlin, having once more achieved distinction as a diamond hero will undoubtedly take another whirl at the acting game. As an actor Mike was universally praised as being a great ball player.

Last but not least among those who will break into vaudeville this year is Charley Faust, the eccentric Kansas farmer, who has been with the New York Giants' squad for several weeks. Faust will make his debut in New York.

J. Franklin Baker, the home-run hitter of the Philadelphia Athletics, has received some tempting offers, since he achieved such great fame by his two home-run clouts, but Baker has turned a deaf ear to all offers up to date. Baker has a family and a home in Maryland, and he expects to stick there during the winter.

Marty O'Toole was a much-sought personage by vaudeville managers, when he was gaining so much notoriety as the highest priced player in the history of baseball, but he had little to do as a major leaguer, and he was crowded out of the limelight by more recent heroes.

A Des Moines man had an attack of muscular rheumatism in his shoulder. A friend advised him to go to Hot Springs. That meant an expense of $150.00 or more. He sought for a quicker and cheaper way to cure it and found it in Chamberlain's Liniment. Three days after the first application of this liniment he was well For sale by all dealers.

A HUMOROUS ANECDOTE

The late Lord Ardwall had a gift of spontaneous humor, a great flow of anecdote, and a turn for vigorous expression. Round this idiosyncrasy many stories grouped themselves. One was to the effect that while he was busy at his desk one day one of his boys came into his study and annoyed him by fidgeting about the room. "Can't you keep quiet? What is the matter with you?" the parent asked sharply. "Father, do you know I asked you yesterday what a billion was?" "Yes. What about it?" "And you remember you told me it was a devil of a lot?" "Well, perhaps I did. But why on earth can't you sit down if you've anything to say to me?" "Well, the teacher asked me to-day what a billion was, and I gave him the right answer—and—and—that's why I can't sit down."

Laces and Embroideries

These Dainty Goods Come Direct From Switzerland

Just out of their wrappings from a long journey across seas are these lovely Laces and Embroideries.

Only in Switzerland are such exquisite patterns and such superlatively fine qualities created. Edges that are like an intricate frost mark—all overs that resemble a rich mosaic design and insertions simulating a lattice over which flowers ramble as they will.

And these beautiful goods are made for service hard and long. You may place them upon garments subject to continual tubbing confident that they will give a maximum amount of wear. Edges will not fray or eyelets pull out.

We challenge comparison of these beautiful Laces and Embroideries with the finest presented anywhere—and a comparison of our prices for them which in their lowness are entirely at variance with the exceptional excellence of the goods.

RICHARD HALL & SON LTD

CHRISTMAS.

When the turkey looks down-hearted, and the kids look full of glee
And the snow falls from the heavens, light as down,
Fix your appetite for Christmas, be as good as you can be,
When the mince-pies and plum-puddings come to town.

All the world is glad and merry and the Christmas bells ring loud,
And their pealing seems to thrill you through and through.
That's the time you think that you are just the happiest in the crowd,
But remember there are others, happy, too.

Yes, we all know there are others, and we hope that they are glad,
And happy, through the merry Christmas Day;
But, some kiddies can't be happy—what is home without a dad?
And a mother, dear to drive their tears away.

So when you get the dinner, set a place for someone else;
And be sure that you have someone fill the place.
It's a pleasure to help someone when he cannot help himself.
Just to make a smile appear on someone's face.

Someone will be grateful, and that gratitude will be
A source of joy for you in days to come.
So open up your heart and let the people see
You will freely share the sunshine in your home.

Make Christmas what it should be, add more brightness to the day,
Than the people have imagined would befall it.
Be up and doing always, scatter sunbeams on your way,
And make Christmas time as merry as you call it.

Small Fire On King Street

A huge column of flame emitting from an overheated chimney, and a chorus of excited voices emanating from the throats of several frightened women was the situation that confronted the firemen as they dashed up to the scene of the chimney fire last evening about six o'clock. Owing to the indefinite instructions given by the party who sent in the alarm, the department were delayed several minuts, and when they arrived on the scene of the conflagration they were scored by the fair sex for their failure to respond with greater promptitude Nothing daunted, however, they attacked the fire with zealous energy, under the combined direction of Chief Howard and the feminine element, and soon had the fire under control.

The scene of the conflagration was 303 King street. The house is occupied by Mrs. Thornton. The damage was slight.

THE FUNERAL OF MRS. LEGRANDER

The funeral of the late Mrs. Joseph LeGrander took place this morning. At 9 o'clock the funeral cortege proceeded from the family residence, 136 Perry street, to the Sacred Heart church, and afterwards to St. Peter's cemetery for interment. The Rev. Fr. McCauley officiated at the church and the Rev Dr. O'Brien at the cemetery.

In addition to many out-of-town visitors, a large number of friends and relatives attended the funeral to show a last mark of respect to a lady who was generally beloved, and sympathy for the relatives. The many beautiful floral tributes were also symbolical of the high esteem in which the deceased lady was held.

The pallbearers were Messrs. Louis, Eddie and Alwick LeGrander (sons), Frank and Thomas Desantel (brothers) and N. T. Laplante (brother-in-law.)

POPULAR ROUTE

At 11.00 a.m. a special train with 8 cars left the Dearborn Station, Chicago, for New York, with over 250 passengers.

Another special left the same station at 2.00 p.m. with 7 cars with over 200 passengers for the S. S. "Megantic," which sailed from Portland Dec. 9th.

Another special left at 2.30 p. m with six cars and over 150 passengers for the S. S. "Franconia" of the Cunard Line, sailing from Boston Dec. 9th, and at 9.00 p.m. another special pulled out from Chicago with six cars with over 150 passengers for the steamships leaving New York on Dec. 9th.

All these special trains were of most modern equipment and quick runs were made to destination.

A Great Attraction

"Nero and the Burning of Rome" was considered a wonderful subject, but it pales into significance when compared with "The Fall of Troy". Imagine, if you can, colossal staging, with a depth extending to the horizon; thousands of people, splendidly garbed, taking part; settings which fairly take your breath away with their grandeur; the Trojan war, with thousands of armed gladiators on the battlefield; the spectacular attack on the walls of Troy; the ruse of the giant wooden horse, which is captured; the sortie in the dead of night by the soldiers concealed in the animal; and the blood-thrilling, awe-inspiring conflagrations as they set fire to the beautiful city; the terror of the lovely Helen, as her husband, King Menelaus, at the head of the avenging Greeks, destroy the Trojans with fire and sword; the death of Paris, her lover, in a thrilling duel with Menelaus;—imagine all this, if you can, and the multitude of accompanying incidents; the chariots, the beautiful women, the artistic statuary and architecture,—all depicted in exquisite photography tinted and toned beyond compare, and you will secure a faint realization of what this production is. The above great photoplay will be the special feature at the Princess Wednesday and Thursday.

McMANIGAL TALKS

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 26.—While packing up his few belongings in his cell in the county jail preparatory to his departure for Indianapolis, Ortie McManigal, who has confessed to exploding dynamite at the Llewellyn Iron Works, on which charge he has never been arraigned, dictated an exclusive statement for the United Press. McManigal feels bitterly toward Clarence Darrow, whom he holds directly responsible for the estrangement now existing between himself and Mrs. McManigal. Incidentally he asserted that Mrs. McManigal knew of his various dynamiting jobs and that he turned moneys he received for them over to her. His statement follows::

By Ortie McManigal.

They are going to take me to Indianapolis to-night to testify before the grand jury investigating the dynamite conspiracy. Well, I am going to tell all I know about it, and that is more than anyone else knows besides John J. McNamara and several other "higher-ups" in union circles who are now enjoying temporary freedom. I am going to tell the Indianapolis jury things that I have even withheld from William J. Burns, and when the probe is ended, if justice is done, a score of men who were responsible for my contemptible deeds will find lodgement behind prison bars.

Now that the McNamaras have confessed, I wonder if the rank and file of union labour still feels bitterly towards me. I wonder if I could walk alone unmolested along the streets of Los Angeles. I believe that I could, for 95 per cent. of the members of organized labour are hard-working, broad-minded, and God-fearing men. It is the crookedness of their leaders that has brought about all this trouble. Most of the union men, I believe, will thank me for what I have done, for it is gong to mean the cleaning out of the corrupt "higher-ups" in labour unions. I have done all that I could for the cause of justice, and I now feel that I have in a measure atoned for my deeds. I am glad that I took the stand I did from the first and stuck to it, regardless of all the threats that were made to win me over.

The only thing that worries me now is the estrangement between me and my wife. With Clarence Darrow rests the responsibility for this.

I never wanted to get into the dynamiting business anyway, and was induced to do the work against my will. After I had started I was forced to keep at it by labour officials high up in the organization under threat of my life.

They told me to do it and threatened that if I didn't they would fix me. I did their dirty work and now am suffering for it as I hope they will be made to suffer after the grand jury investigation is ended. Then they double-crossed me. I did not get $1,000 coming to me for jobs I did.

I don't know what is in store for me. There have been no promises made to me, and I do not know whether I am to go to jail or get my freedom. I don't expect to get out without any punishment, though, because I feel that there is something coming to me.

Mr. Bailey On Christmas

Peterborough, Dec. 27, 1911.

Sir,—You do not ask me about Christmas. I think, now, it is only an opportunity to add to plunderous stores. At this festive season could we not get up a subscription to pay the fine of the fortune tellers? No doubt it would be paid back, when they reach more favourable shores.

Should Give Rate-Payers An Estimate In Regard To Power

To the Editor of the Examiner:

SIR,—Mr. E. A. Peck, M.P.P., in addressing the Board of Trade the other evening, gave the legal opinion that if the electors vote "Yes," upon the power bylaw, that then the city council would be authorized and empowered to enter into any contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission that they see fit and to legally bind the town to pay for whatever the council agrees to pay. That is to say, if the electors vote "Yes" upon this bylaw the city council can without any further authority from the ratepayers enter into a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission that would obligate the city for at least a half a million dollars.

The City Council in their address to the electors say, "The city council cannot borrow money for this purpose without again submitting the matter to the ratepayers."

That is a quibble that is only worthy of some gold brick shark. The gold brick shark says to the farmer, "Enter into this contract and sign this note. It is not a mortgage on your farm." The farmer takes him at his word. The note becomes due. The farmer is sued upon his note, and the sheriff puts a lien on his land.

The council in adopting the latest gold brick method says to the ratepayers, "Vote for this bylaw; the council cannot borrow money for this purpose without again submitting the matter to the ratepayers," to raise money on debentures.

But the city council can enter into a contract under the proposed bylaw making the town liable for $500,000.00 or more. Suppose the ratepayers do not pay. The court and the sheriff will find a way to place a lien upon the town that wil be as good as any debentures without any further vote of the ratepayers.

The city council are treating the ratepayers like children in this transaction. It is not necessary for the council to quibble with the ratepayers. The fact that the city council are quibbling with the ratepayers in this transaction is the best reason why they should not be given any such authority.

If they are quibbling innocently then they are a lot of incompetents. If they are quibbling, to intentionally mislead, then they are equally unworthy of confidence.

The City Council should treat the ratepayers with respect. Before asking the ratepayers to vote upon this bylaw, they should have submitted an estimate showing what it is going to cost the town, showing what they can sell light for, how much per horse power they can sell power for, and show what surplus quantity of power they would have on hand to attract new industries.

And, still more important, they should show how the loss on such surplus power is going to be made good. For instance, if the city council have 2,000 surplus horse power on hand and unused that will have cost the city at least $13.00 a horse power to produce, and until such surplus horse power is sold the city will lose a revenue of $13.00 per horse power on 2,000 horse power.

A school boy can calculate a loss of $26,000.00 a year. It takes a good many tax bills in this town to make up a loss of $26,000.00 a year.

It is a serious matter for the ratepayers to trust a quibbling council.

It has kept the city council busy to keep the dust down on George street. They had better show the ratepayers that they have the ability to keep the mud off George street before asking a free hand to enter into a contract involving, first and last, nearly a million dollars.

Yours truly,

ENQUIRER.

Much Severe And Stormy Weather In January Says Hicks

Following are the weather forecasts for January, 1912, as given by Rev. Irl R. Hicks:

A Reactionary Storm Period will make itself felt, in a progressive way, from west to east, central on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th. This period is at the centre of a Venus equinox, with moon at full, in perigree and at north extreme declination. It will bring decided rise in temperature, falling barometer, with rain, turning to snow and sleet as storms advance eastwardly across the country. A seismic period, covering six to seven days, is central on the 4th. Great extremes from high to low winter temperatures will mark this and other January periods.

A Regular Storm Period, central on the 7th, covers the 5th to the 9th. This period under the Venus influence promises to take up the disturbances immediately preceding it, causing a prolonged spell of stormy, disagreeable weather. The period will culminate on and touching the 9th, in possible thunder and rain, with sudden change to freezing, blizzard and high north gales. A very low barometer at the first stage of these storms will be warning of a great and far-reaching cold wave, which will prevail generally, and far into the south, from about the 9th to 12th.

A Reactionary Storm Period is central on the 13th, 14th and 15th, at which time the general cold will relax, the barometer will fall, and cloudiness with rain and snow will pass eastwardly across the country. Prolonged cloudiness and threatening weather will follow this period, as a result of the Mercury and Mars equinoxes.

A Regular Storm Period covers the 17th to the 21st, central on the 19th, with new moon. The Mercury period is central on the 18th, and the Mars period will also begin its perturbing influence at this time. The moon will be in apogee and at extreme south declination. Watch your barometer as this period develops! If it falls to very low readings, fierce winter gales will surely follow; rains will turn to destructive sleet; blizzards will rush down from the north-west, and a furious cold wave will wind up the storm turmoil, say about the 20th to 23rd. Don't forget this period, or neglect such precautions as might save you great suffering and loss. A seismic wave will pass through many parts of the earth within three or four days of Friday, the 19th. The Mars influence at this storm period will "set the pace" for storm and weather for six or eight weeks to come. In other words—the same general character of sorms and weather prevailing at this time will be characteristic of storms and weather through February and far into March.

A Reactionary Storm Period falls centrally on the 24th, 25th and 26th. The moon passes the celestial equator on the 24th, which fact always brings marked tendency to higher temperature, drop in barometric pressure, and electrical disturbances. Thunder and lightning even in winter, as a rule, result at the transits of the moon over the equator. Watch these dates all through the year. Rain and snow will return on and touching the 24th and 25th, followed by higher barometer and reaction to very cold.

A Regular Storm Period is central on the 30th, reaching from the 28th of January to the 2nd of February. January will go out with falling barometer, rising temperature, growing cloudiness, and rainstorms in western sections, moving eastward. These storms will be over the central Mississippi valley about the 31s, with rising barometer and much colder advancing from the north-west Eastern extremes will have storms and change to colder, one to three days ater.

Upon the whole, we figure that January will bring much severe and stormy weather. The cold will be sudden and very great at the periods indicated in the storm chart, calling for forethought in the care and protection of live stock and perishable goods. It should be noted that a Venus period covers almost the entire month, being central on the 2nd. This corrects the error of the engraver concerning the date of the Venus period—an error into which we were unfortunately led in our 1911 Almanac. Look for warm, bright days just preceding severe storms and blizzards, and for severe and dangerous cold waves on the immediate heels of storms.

The Venus and Mars periods overlap each other in all the central part of January. At the same time a Mercury period adds its perturbing influence for ten or twelve days. We advise our readers, and the public generally, to be on the watch at this time. Take care, and not be caught far from shelter, out in the open; blizzardous north-west. Do not forget the duty you owe to the dumb creatures, who may survive or perish, according as you plan and act for their protection and care. We hold that it is not only bad business management, but inhuman and criminal to spare any or reasonable means for the protection of helpless live stock against such storms and weather, as are most probable, not only in January, but through February and into March. It may be put down as a certainty that stormy, wintry weather will predominate through February into March, if such storms and weather prevail the last half of January—all of which we believe are to be expected. The Mars influence this year begins early enough to tie winter conditions for at least six weeks beyond the centre of his period, which is February the 6th.

HONOURED WITH PRESENTATION ON EVE OF THEIR DEPARTURE

Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Campbell the Recipients of a Handsome Silver Tea Service.

ADDRESS WAS READ

On Saturday evening, Dec. 23, the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Campbell of Smith gathered at their home to spend a social hour and present them with a handsome silver tea-service, as an expression of good will, prior to their removal to Harwood. Music and social intercourse occupied the early portion of the evening, after which an interesting address was read by Mr. John Darling, and the tea-service, presented by Mr. J. Herbert Darling, on behalf of the community. Mr. Campbell made a few well-chosen remarks in response to the address. The ladies served refreshments at the close, and after singing Auld Lang Syne the Company dispersed. The following is the address:

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Campbell, Central Smith.

Dear friends,—It is with pleasure, mingled with regret, that we, your friends and neighbours of Central Smith gather at your home this evening to express to you our high esteem and to give you God speed, on your approaching removal from our neighbourhood. During the nine years of your residence amongst us, we have been gratified with genuine satisfaction, both in our business and social relations. In the cheese and butter factory we have found you, Mr. Campbell, an industrious, honourable man, capable in your work and painstaking in your efforts to make the business a success. In our many social gatherings we have enjoyed your company and assistance. In the latter we refer to Mrs. Campbell, who also enjoys the confidence of us all.

As a token of our esteem, we ask you to accept this silver tea service, and these gold coins, hoping you may often be reminded of the hospitality that awaits your future visits to the homes of your many friends in Smith.

As you enter upon your new enterprise at Harwood, may God's blessing rest upon your efforts, and may the coming year be a happy and prosperous one.

Signed on behalf of this gathering —John Darling, Garbutt Mann, Robert Devell, J. Herbert Darling, Samuel Adams, Samuel Stinson, Nelson Blewitt.

TEN "DONT'S" FOR YOUNG MEN

BROCKTON, MASS., DEC. 23.—The Rev. Dr. Albert Marion Hyde, of the Porter Congregational church, has given the following "Ten Dont's for Young Men":

"Do not speak of 'the old gent' and 'the old woman'; fathers and mothers are a necessary evil in the present system of things. They have spoken respectfully of you when outsiders could not see anything on which they could hang even a small compliment.

"Do not give all your attention to the education of the brains on the outside of your head. Football hair and a letter on your jersey are not a sufficient training for life. The young fellow who is old-fashioned enough to go to school for study still has a place in the world.

"Do not invest your nickel in a glass of beer, then afterwards criticise the other fellow who has invested his nickel in a savings bank. Beer checks and savings bank cheques to investments are not in the same class.

"Do not put the money of your tailor and your washerwoman in $5 opera seats and $3 theatre tickets. They may prefer to spend their earnings in some other way.

"Do not measure your job entirely by the size of the pay envelope and at the length of the vocation. Highway robbery is an ideal vocation measured in these ways.

"Do not try to get rich quick; smarter men than you, who have come to town without a cent, have tried it and lost all they had.

"Do not wrong a woman. Every woman is some mother's daughter. The white life you ask from your mother's daughter you have no right to take from the daughter of another.

"Do not defile your tongue with profane and vulgar speech, revealing your ignorance and showing the coarseness in your soul.

"Do not think you have sounded all the ocean of truth when you have let out all your little line. The ocean on whose shore Newton had gathered only a few pebbles can never be all in your tin cup.

"Do not be a stranger to the church of your father. The old pew looks lonesome without you. Your father went to his honour and his prosperity straight from the church door. The path is still there. You need the church and the church needs you."

A Series Of Farm Specials

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is arranging with the governments of Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick for a series of farm specials to be run during next spring and summer in connection with the agricultural colleges of those provinces. The object is the education of the farmer, who will be shown the latest and best methods of land culture, dairying, stock-raising, fruit-growing and, in fact, everything pertaining to the farm. These trains which will consist of several baggage cars, fully equipped by the different colleges and manned by experts, who will have special coaches, in which to deliver lectures on agricultural topics, will stop at the principal points on the company's lines, and remain long enough to enable those attending the opportunity of gathering a great deal of valuable information regarding their calling. Besides the lectures, literature, fully explaining everything pertaining to farm life will be freely distributed and every opportunity will be afforded farmers to gather a fund of useful knowledge To secure a large attendance at their meetings which will be widely advertised, the C.P.R. will offer cheap transportation to farmers, and it is confidently expected their efforts on the part of the governments and the C.P.R. will excite greater interest in the productive capacity of farm lands and benefit the whole country materially.

PARALYZED LIMBS

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Honsburger, 10 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: 'Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years.'

POLICE COURT

Frank Millan was found lying at the rear of the monumental shop at the corner of George and Charlotte streets, last night, and as a result, was asked to pay a $2.00 fine in the Police Court this morning. He said he did not have the necessary "Williams" so, as a result of his financial embarrassment, he will be given the opportunity of watching the old year out and the new year in, from behind the prison bars.

Pat. Toohr reluctantly half-perched on the side of the prisoners' box, when his name was called. He was another who had unfortunately extended his Christmas celebrations, and, as a finishing touch to his fun, contributed $2.00 more to the good cause, and with this the Court adjourned.

Harwood Creamery Makes Good.

Annual Meeting of Patrons and Friends—Highly Satisfactory Reports—Oyster Supper and Entertainment

HARWOOD, ONT., DEC. 19.—The annual creamery meeting was held here to-day. The President, A. Campbell, called the meeting to order at 2.30 p.m. The first items of business being the minutes of the last annual meeting and also the secretary's report both were accepted by a vote of the meeting. A short address was given by G. A. Gillespie of Peterborough, who was warmly received and much appreciated by the patrons on account of the straightforward and business like manner in which he has carried on the business of the Harwood creamery. It is regretted very much that Mr. Gillespie has sold the creamery, although we hear nothing but a good report of Mr. Campbell, of Central Smith, who has bought the Harwood creamery and will manage it in the future.

An evidence of the benefit derived by those patronizing the creamery was demonstrated by a patron who explained that it was his first year and that he had received $800 more from the Harwood creamery for the year 1911 than he had from the cheese factory for 1910 from the same number of cows and in the same period of time, and in addition he had all his good, sweet skim milk to use on his farm.

In the evening an oyster supper was given the patrons by Mr. Gillespie, which was served by Mrs. H. Spry.

After the supper addresses were given by D. J. Cameron, Dairy Instructor, who strong advocated cooling the cream after separating and also for all patrons to keep their separators in a good clean place and to wash it twice daily when used.

Mr. R. E. Sherwin, the auditor, was then called on, who ably outlined the system by which the business was done, and praised the work of the secretary-treasurer. Master Eddie Sargent favoured the meeting with two of his comic songs, which were loudly applauded. There was also a dialogue given by three young men of the vicinity, which added much to the humour of the evening. Mr. Geo. Berry, of Cavan, who is a director of the creamery, was present, and was called on for a speech, but told a story, which kept the audience in a roar of laughter.

The new proprietor, Mr. Campbell, gave a brief address, which was followed by the Rev. Mr. Black, who showed the advantage in the proper care of cream.

The national anthem was then sung and the meeting was dismissed with prayer by Rev. Mr. Black. This brought to a close the largest meeting ever held in Harwood in connection with the creamery, the hall being filled to its utmost, and a number being unable to gain admittance to the meeting.

The following is the report for 1911:

The creamery opened the first week in April and continued until the last of November.

Total number lbs. of cream received 274,905.

Total number lbs. of butter fat, 99,316.65.

Total lbs. of butter made, 114,368.

Total cash received, $26,030.56.

Total expenses, $4,484.27.

Cash paid patrons, $21,546.26.

The average net price for B. fat, 21.69 cents.

The average selling price of butter 22.76 cents.

The average lbs. butter to 1 lb. B. fat, 1.14.

There were 218 patrons who sent cream during the season.

HASTINGS ITEMS OF INTEREST

Special to The Examiner

HASTINGS, DEC. 25.—In the Methodist church on Sunday evening, Rev. Mr. Anderson preached a very able sermon on "The Church and the Saloon," which was much enjoyed by those present.

The schools have closed for the Christmas vacation and the children are making great efforts at sleighriding and skating.

A number from this section attended the funeral of Mrs. J. Brackenridge on Monday last. Deceased had been ailing for some time, and the end was not unexpected.

A rousing local option meeting was held in the town hall here on Wednesday evening, which was addressed by Mrs. Hitchcock of Toronto, a noted temperance worker. She was accompanied by Mrs. Stanbury and son, Douglas, the famous boy singer. The address was a very able one and was well delivered, while the youthful singer almost captivated the audience by his choice selections Mrs. Stanbury was the accompanist, and very ably succeeded in that respect.

Mr. Wm. Oakman treated a few friends to an oyster supper on Thursday evening last, when a very enjoyable time was spent.

Quite a number of our citizens spent Christmas Saturday in Peterborough.

We are pleased to learn that little Miss Helen Wilcox is much improved in health.

Miss Jean O'Neil of Lindsay, is home for the holidays.

Miss Lizzie Laing, teacher at No. 5, is spending the Christmas vacation at her home near Peterborough.

Those who attended nomination in Westwood, on Friday last, report an exciting time and several stirring addresses.

Mrs. Moore of Uxbridge is visiting friends in town.

A fire, which caused a considerable amount of damage, took place on Friday afternoon in the general store of Mr. J. J. English. Immediately on the sound of the alarm, the fire brigade rushed to the scene and worked nobly to extinguish the flames, which were soon subdued, but not, however, until the interior of the building was a complete wreck. Mr. English and family resided above the store and lost heavily in their housefurnishings. Those in the immediate vicinity of the fire feel deeply indebted to the fire brigade, for their noble and persistent efforts to keep it in check, and feel grateful that the extent of the damage was so limited.

Those who attended the Christmas concert in Westwood on Friday night report a good crowd.

Our local store-keeps were taxed to their utmost on Saturday in an almost unsuccessful effort to wait on the crowd of Christmas shoppers.

Mr. J. Stevenson of Western Canada, is renewing old acquaintances here after an absence of twenty-five years.

Mr. and Mrs. Stott of Belleville, are guests at the home of her sister, Mrs. A. Parsons.

Rev. Mr. Ferguson of Belleville, spent Christmas at the home of his sister, Mrs. B. Shaw.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Laing and family of Norwood, spent Christmas day with Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Beavis.

Miss Pickens of Peterborough, is visiting under the parental roof.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

The condition of the surface of George street was again brought to light this morning when Mr. Ethelbert Rhoss, a traveller for a Toronto firm, and who has occasion to frequently visit this city, commented on the topic. He said: "It is almost remarkable that such a desirable city as Peterborough should have such a poor main street," and he also remarked on the unsightly poles, saying he thought the time was ripe for the authorities to abolish them.

A CHASE FOR HONOUR'S SAKE

A Short Story.

Finch's aeroplane lay on its runway in its accustomed place back of his stable. He had taken out his switch plug, but I had counted on that and brought along one of my own. I looked at the tank, saw that it was full of gas, and that the oil cups were full, as I knew that Finch never left his machine for lack of anything. I put in the plug, turned on the motor, started up the propeller and in a jiffy was sliding down the run, and was off.

I cast a fleeting glance behind me and caught a glimpse of Finch frantically waving his arms out of a third-storey window. If it hadn't been so early in the morning, and if I hadn't crept up so quietly, Finch would have awakened in time, for he was a light sleeper. But I hadn't stalked deers for years for nothing.

There was a slight mist in the air as I rose; at first I felt a bit awkward, as one always does in another man's machine; I had to get used to it. But I took a slant or two for practice, and swung around in a swift circle, and then I felt easier. I could tell by the feel of it that everything was proper and shipshape.

Did you ever see a baseball player when he catches a liner, hold it for what seems to be an indeterminable time before he throws it to first base? You think that it is a waste of time, don't you? Did you ever see a dog, lying in the road ahead, wait as you are coming along until it would seem as if you must run over him, but always get up in time? Well, that's the way it ought to be. That is why on this tremendous journey I was about to take, where so much was at stake, I spent a few moments leisurely trying out the machine. It's calmness, quietness, a certain leisurely quality in a man's soul that after all make for the most perfect skill.

Finch was the best man in the world. Moreover, he was my best friend. It was to save his honour, his lasting happiness that I was making that wonderful journey in the early morning—nay, it was more than that; it was to save happiness of two human souls.

From the first moment I had seen her face, as it sped by that morning in the car, I never hesitated. It must be done. And so I had rushed on my clothes and stolen over to Finch's and got away with his machine before he knew it—and all for him. What I had to think of now, in case I accomplished my purpose, and brought her back—was to make it all right between them. But that was a problem by itself. What interested me at present was to find the motor car that had taken her off—that I had seen flashing past my house in the early light of dawn, with her white face in the rear and that other man in front.

It seemed impossible to believe it—to think that Finch's best friend should do such a dastardly thing.

The worst of it was that Finch was such an innocent—one of those large, trusting natures always ready to believe everyone. Of course that comes from inexperience. If he had, like I, surfeited himself on all the capitals of Europe, if he had scoured the Rocky Mountains and had slept day and night on the open plains, if he had passed half of his days in mining camps and the rest in high society, he would understand what a woman is, or at least he would know that no woman can be trusted under certain circumstances.

I had tried to hint about it to Finch; I had told him that Huber had no business to be staying with him in the same house with his pretty wife; and what had Finch done?—had merely replied:

"Oh, you suspicious old cuss, why don't you get married yourself and get some of your misanthropy taken out of you?"

There was no use saying anything more about it to Finch. He was immune. He was a friend of Huber's, and when Finch is a friend to any man, that settles it; he wouldn't believe a thing against him.

For days I had been watching things, and while I had no positive information or proof, I was thoroughly satisfied in my mind that Huber was only waiting his chance. He possessed a fascinating manner; just the sort of a man to interest a young thing like Mrs. Finch. It seemed impossible to believe that anyone, indeed, could be so blind.

I kept pretty close watch, making up my mind that if the time ever came when Finch needed a friend I would be on hand. And the night before I had been over there, playing pool with Finch and Huber, when the incident happened that made me certain that something was up; for as I passed through the hall there was Mrs. Finch with her maid, and I heard her whisper, "To-morrow morning at 4."

Like a flash it came over me that the maid was in her confidence. Something was going to happen to-morrow morning at 4

And then, as I saw later how thoroughly happy and unconcerned she appeared to be when she joined us, I dismissed it and cursed myself for my temperament.

But at night, when I got home, I found that I couldn't sleep. Was it possible, after all, that Huber and Mrs. Finch had laid their plans? Knowing human nature the way I did, I was prepared to believe anything.

I tossed all night. At 3.30 I got up and endeavoured to read. I must have sat in my window for three-quarters of an hour, but I couldn't put my mind on my book.

And then suddenly I hear a whirr in the distance. I flung open the shutter, leaned out and looked down the road.

A motor car was coming!

Now, Finch himself is a fast driver, but I never saw anything like this in my life. That car was going 70 miles an hour if an inch.

I hung on the window sill breathless; then I slunk inside as it came nearer. I fastened my eyes on the flying shape.

Yes, Huber was in front. He had his goggles on, but I knew him at once. And in the back seat, her face white and set, was the woman he was running off with—Mrs. Finch!

"Betrayed!" I had shouted to myself, and now, after a rush down the road, here I was high in the air, circling, and Finch, back there, wondering, no doubt, who was the thief. I couldn't help but wonder myself, even in the midst of weightier thoughts, whether he had yet found out that his wife had flown.

The car had gone north.

I knew that they could not keep up that terrific pace. Even in my mad rush I had thought it all out.

There was a Western express train that left Peabody Junction at 6 o'clock, stopping there for a moment at the crossing. Instinctively I divined that they were headed for that express. If they caught it it would be all over. Finch would lose his wife and his eternal happiness. But if I caught them first it would not be too late. I believed that I could still bring them back to their senses. A good firm talk would do wonders. Then after that would come the work of reconciling them. But much is to be forgiven a wayward young girl like that. And I had good hopes that if I caught that car the happiness and the honour of my friends would be saved.

Peabody Junction was nearly 200 miles away. The post road lay like a thin streak far below. I tilted up at first and the mist held the road away from me ahead; but even now, as I slid on, the earth appearing to unfold itself under me, I lifted slightly and could see the road ahead for quite a bit.

No car.

There was a sharp hill ahead, part of the Shadrack Mountains, and I tilted up more and more, making up my mind to take no chances. I counted on adverse air currents, and if it had not been for this fact I might have lost my life, for suddenly the right aileron began to flutter and I was swirled to 1¼ way over; but I kept my balance and dropped like lightning, twisting down my rudder and taking a long slant until I had passed under the current. Then up again and over the hill.

I advanced my accelerator, and poked her up to 50 miles an hour; now that I had got over that hill and there was a straight line of country ahead of me I felt more confidence. Besides it was necessary to get speed.

I wondered how fast that machine could go, anyway. I heard Finch say that he had got over 60 out of her, but I had always doubted it. She was certainly a staunch machine. From the moment I started off I had the utmost confidence in her. Indeed, with that flash of humour that sometimes comes to one in a great crisis, I remember thinking to myself that I wished I had as much confidence in Finch's wife.

I struck down to about 600 feet, I should judge, and then sped on faster and faster.

What was that? Yes, in the road far ahead I discerned a speck.

It was Finch's flying car, and in it were the two wicked people I was after. I wondered if they knew I was coming.

I looked off to the right, mentally calculating my chances. I could see the train now, moving along like a trailing worm. But that didn't interest me so much, after all, as the car ahead.

I leaned forward, as a coxswain does in his scull, hoping to get an inch or so more out of that biplane. As steady as a bird she flew on and on.

Gaining!

I felt a little exultant thrill. Little by little I was coming up on them.

Then I began to gain more rapidly. At first I could not get the reason until it came to me that the car had stopped.

I slanted down. It took all my courage and nerve to make the approach, as Finch's machine was strange to me; but even as I was dropping, and at the same time slowing down upon the engine, I caught a glimpse of the people in the car as they jumped out, and I heard a hoarse voice shouting to me.

Shall I ever forget that voice?

For, as I landed in the field near to the road, lightly and easily, Finch himself sprang over the fence and came running up to me from the car.

"What the devil are you doing?" he asked, breathlessly. "Can't I take a morning ride with my wife without your borrowing my machine and risking your precious life?"

I had to lie quickly.

"I couldn't resist the temptation," I smiled. "But say, old man, who was that individual waving his arms so frantically at me out of your third-storey window?"

Finch shook his head and smiled.

"Why, that was dear old Huber," he said. "I told him to guard that biplane with his life; that I thought a good deal more of it than I did of Bessie here. Eh, Bessie?"—Galveston News.

HE LOOKS YOUNG WITH HIS HAT ON

but he has neglected his hair and the persistent little dandruff germs have swept his scalp and made him look like an old man. If he had heard of Sageine would he have stopped the dandruff germs from stealing his hair? He might have been negligent then. So many lazy people have dandruff. They don't need to have it because W. J. Kent sells Sageine and guarantees it to kill the dandruff germ and stop falling hair or money back. Get a bottle of Sageine to-day, don't neglect, it is only 50 cents a large bottle. Your hair is worth just what you make it.

Cocoa Now Being Served at Afternoon Receptions

One who attends many receptions observes that cocoa is growing in popularity as an afternoon beverage. Indeed its use in select circles is so frequent as to suggest that "afternoon cocoa" may soon become quite a fad.

At a recent large reception the serving of Fry's Cocoa occasioned many favourable comments and the general impression prevailed that it proved a most pleasing innovation. "Why should we not break the monotony of tea, tea, tea," one lady remarked, "with good cocoa, which, when well made, far surpasses either tea or coffee in flavour, nutriment, and stimulating qualities."

Fire Horses

It may be that New York will soon see its last fire horse, but at present they are far from cheap. Fire horses cost on an average $326 each, and once the property of the city they waste some time going to school before they are of use.

There are a number of training stables where green animals are taught their duties. The most important of them is on St. Edward's Place, Brooklyn, facing the little plaza at the north-west corner of Fort Greene Park. There is a row of three substantial buildings, two of them constituting the training quarters and hospital, while the third is a four-storey structure devoted to the repair shops of the Brooklyn department.

It is in the training stables that raw horses, direct from the country, are received and converted into first-class fire horses. The streets bounding the block on which the buildings stand constitute the training track, and every day teams of green animals race around the block, uphill and down, dragging a heavy department "tender."

To the trainers, who go about their work in a businesslike way, it is merely a daily routine, but to the onlookers it is replete with excitement. For the raw horses, even though hampered with the weight of the big tender, which is about 2,500 pounds, frequently run away, dashing madly around corners and imperiling the lives of the driver and those accompanying him. This work is under the supervision of Lieut. Isaac Ludgate, for many years a valiant fire fighter. An expert driver and two or three assistants participate in the training work. The health of the animals is in the care of Dr. William F. Doyle, a civilian employee of the department.

"There are seventy-six engine companies in this immense district," said Lieut. Ludgate, "and we must supply the horses for all, besides taking care of the sick and crippled animals.

"The green horse's training is strenuous from the start. We give him little chance to run away. You may see our system at work if you will come with me."

Acting on the lieutenant's orders, the stablemen brought out a team for training. Trembling in every muscle, ears pricked up and nostrils dilated, they danced nervously on the stable floor as they stood waiting for the driver to signal for the start. Out into St. Edward's Place they were first carefully driven up and down the asphalt pavement. It was a remarkably tractable team and readily settled down into a steady pace, giving evidence of greenness only by the quivering of limbs and dilating of nostrils. Then with a sharp "Cluck! Cluck!" from the driver they were headed north and soon disappeared around the Myrtle Avenue corner.

"The first thing is to test the horse's wind," said the chief. "We will step to the corner of Willoughby Street and you can see them coming up hill." A few moments later the team rounded into Willoughby Street on a dead run.

"Are they running away?" the lieutenant was asked.

"No. They are not likely to try to run away coming up that hill, for they have all they can do to haul that tender up hill on a run. But it is the best of tests to determine a horse's wind." Just then Driver Callahan reined up the panting team to a complete stop. The horses were all of a tremble with the excitement of the run, but had lost much of their apparent fear and lack of self-control.

"Splendid wind," remarked Dr. Doyle. "They seem far above the average."

"They'll fill the bill after a few more trials," replied the driver in charge.

"How long does it take to get a horse fully fitted for departmental work?" was asked of Lieut. Ludgate.

"Well," he replied, "horses are like men. Their muscles are soft and yielding, and they must be hardened by exercise. These animals come in from the country fields unshod except as to their hind feet, and we do not shoe them until they are tried and accepted. It takes us about a week, as a rule, to ascertain whether a horse will fill the bill or not, and sometimes it takes two or three weeks to get them in perfect condition for service. Some of the best horses we try out are unsuited for engine work because they are not of the correct build. They may do, however, for tender work. Engine horses must have little bodies and be strong and sturdy of limb, though not big. The thighs must be sinewy and powerful, for it is a heavy task for three good horses to drag an engine that weighs something like six thousand pounds for a mile and a half, the average of the runs to fires, on a dead gallop.

"People are generally of the opinion that the great growth of automobile usage has created a depreciation of prices for horses," remarked Dr. Doyle, "but such is not the case. Horses that are suitable for service in the fire department are dearer than they were a few years ago. The greatest care is taken in their selection, and the entire country is scoured for such animals. Our horses come from no particular section, but are obtained from the east, west, north, and the south. Many of our best animals come from Iowa, Wisconsin, Ohio, and Kentucky—few further south than that. But the requirements of the department are so strict that it is only the pick of the entire country that is acceptable."—New York Sun.

Isaac Harris and Max Blanck, Proprietors of Triangle Waist Factory Are Set Free

SPECTATOR IS HYSTERICAL

New York, Dec. 28.—The state failed yesterday in its effort to fix the blame for the fire horror on March 25, 1911, in which 147 young women shirtwaist makers in a factory on the top floors of the Asch Building were burned or driven to jump to their deaths on the pavements, nine floors below.

A verdict of "not guilty" was brought in late yesterday afternoon in the case of Isaac Harris and Max Blanck, proprietors of the factory known as the Triangle Waist Co., who are the only persons indicted in connection with the holocaust.

Unusual precautions were taken to prevent repetition at the court-house yesterday of the demonstrations which have occurred in a long series of mass meetings, parades and in other ways against the defendants since the fire. Only a few persons were allowed in the court-room and the corridors and entrances were heavily guarded by extra policemen.

The jury came in at 4.35 p.m., after deliberating for an hour and forty-five minutes. The pronouncement of acquittal was first taken quietly by the defendants, but after an adjournment to an ante-room they gave way to their emotion in tears, when embraced by relatives and friends. As they passed out through a lane of policemen to the street a large crowd of men, women and children awaited them.

One hysterical man tried to press his way through the throng, crying in a high voice: "Not guilty, not guilty; Murder, murder, murder!"

He fell on the steps of the court-house in convulsions, gasping that he had lost a sister in the fire. An ambulance was summoned to take him to an hospital. By the time this excitement was over the defendants had darted into a subway entrance and got free of the hostile crowd.

Harris and Blanck were not charged in a wholesale manner with the deaths that occurred at the fire, but specifically with manslaughter in the case of Margaret Schwartz, a young girl who was found asphyxiated and burned near a door on the ninth floor. The main argument of both prosecution and defence was directed against this door, the state introducing over a hundred witnesses in an attempt to prove that it was locked and the defence refuting this contention by a mass of testimony.

Hope to "Convert" Tenderloin.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 28.—Accompanied by police, a committee of women religious workers yesterday visited houses in the "red light" district here in an effort to persuade the inmates to take a fresh start in life.

Each woman was offered a respectable home and a position in which she can earn an honest living. A home, to be conducted as an ordinary boarding-house, its address to be kept secret, will be provided for those who accept the offer.

The effort is part of the men and religion forward movement. In addition to planning to care for the women, the organization has gathered the names of all the property owners who rent their places for immoral purposes and will ask that criminal proceedings be started against them.

Mongolia Passes Practically Over to Her To-morrow

TURKESTAN IN SAME FIX

Pekin, Dec. 28.—Mongolia, which almost equals China proper in size, will be proclaimed independent to-day, simultaneously with the cutting off from China of the vast dependency of Turkestan. Both will pass under Russian influence and will practically become Russian protectorates. Russia will at any time be able to annex them. A grand khan will be named as monarch of Mongolia.

The construction of the trans-Mongolian Railway, for which Russia has long sought permission from China, will now be a matter of time, Europe thereby coming nearer to Pekin by three or four days.

Russian influence will flank the Japanese sphere in Manchuria perilously, and a Japanese alliance for the sake of preserving Japanese interests may sooner or later be expected. Russian officers and officials, if not the Russian Government proper, have influenced this action in Mongolia.

Elect President To-day.

Shanghai, Dec. 28.—It is reported that the delegates of the eighteen provinces of China proper intend to meet at Nanking on Dec. 28 to elect Dr. Shun Yat Sen as president of the Provisional Government of the United Provinces.

BRIEFS FROM THE WIRES.

The report on contagious diseases in Montreal for the week ending Dec. 26, showed 138 cases with 29 deaths.

It was announced yesterday that the water and light plants of Woodstock show a profit of over $16,000 for the year.

The Liberals of New Brunswick gathered yesterday for a conference with Hon. Wm. Pugsley. Organization in local and federal politics is the object.

Detective Sam Le Huquet, Montreal, after 23 years on the police force, almost half that time in the detective bureau, has retired. Six years ago he was shot twice by a burglar.

With a rifle which was his Christmas gift, 10-year-old Harry Leowall yesterday shot and instantly killed his mother, Mrs. Cassarina Leowall, in their home near Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis.

As a result of the wave of crime prevalent in Winnipeg lately and especially to put a stop to street hold-ups, police magistrate yesterday sentenced three Galician bandits to 12 years in the penitentiary and twenty-four lashes each.

Earl Johns, Gordon Buchanan and Frank Albraith, ranging in age from 7 to 12 had a desperate struggle for life in the river at Wingham, after going through the ice. The three hung on to the edge of the ice for nearly half an hour until rescued.

The City of London has issued a writ against the Town of Newmarket asking for an injunction to prevent that town from issuing $25,000 debentures in connection with a proposed loan to the Harding Motor Co., which is now a London industry.

Can't Satisfy Teddy.

New York, Dec. 28.—Although President Taft is to be the guest of honor and Andrew Carnegie is down on the program as honorary president, the pending arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France, for which Mr. Taft has labored and which Mr. Carnegie has endorsed, are not to be brought officially before the Citizens' Peace banquet, to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria on Saturday night next.

With this revised understanding Secretary Bloomer called on Col. Roosevelt again yesterday and again the colonel declined flatly to attend.

LOCK-OUT BEGINS.

Disastrous Struggle Is Feared In Lancashire Mills.

Manchester, Eng., Dec. 28.—The refusal of one man and two women to join a trades union, coupled with the decision of the Master Cotton Spinners to close their mills three days in the week, caused a complete stoppage of a great portion of the cotton mills in northeast Lancashire last evening. Efforts are already on foot to bring about a settlement, but as one woman, who left the union after twenty years, because she believes that the benefits are not commensurate with the payments, persists in her attitude, and the master spinners insist upon their right to maintain open shops, a long and bitter struggle is feared. There is danger, too, of the fight spreading to other industries.

The lock-out involves 160,000 weavers and nearly an equal number of spinners will be reduced to half pay. Unfortunately there are indications of probable complications through the introduction of a new issue on the troublesome question of wages. This move has been taken by the weavers, who declare that now a lock-out has been decided upon they intend to make an advance of five per cent. in wages a condition of any settlement. It is estimated that the weekly loss in wages to the weavers and allied workers, spinners and card room employes will amount to $1,400,000. The weavers will receive roughly $325,000 lock out pay from the union.

Winnipeg's Power War.

Winnipeg, Dec. 28.—So keen is the rivalry between the municipal light and power system and the private company that the latter is publishing a page advertisement calling public attention to the weak spots in the former, and predicting the ultimate collapse of the principle of public ownership in Winnipeg. The private company devotes much space to the fact that the Manitoba Government, which took over the Bell Telephone system of the province two years ago, have found it necessary to make heavy advances in the price of telephones, and cites this as an evidence that the Winnipeg municipal plant will shortly be forced to advance rates.

However, the price of light and power has been lowered nearly sixty per cent. since the civic scheme began operation. Hundreds of customers are leaving the private company daily to take the civic service. The private company, however, adds that it will continue to meet all cuts in price.

Bad Year for Coal Industry.

Washington, Dec. 28.—There has been an over-production of coal this year and a consequent struggle for trade, which depressed prices, is the opinion expressed yesterday by Edward W. Parker, coal statistician for the U. S. Geological Survey. Mr. Parker added that there had been few more unsatisfactory years in the history of the coal mining industry and that prices were depressed to such an extent that when the total returns for the year are footed up, the balance probably would be on the wrong side of the ledger, although the production of coal in the United States for the year is probably second only to the record year of 1910.

The total production of coal for the year is estimated at 490,000,000 tons, only 11,000,000 less than in 1910. Of this year's production, 400,000,000 tons was bituminous coal.

Cold Weather Coming.

Chicago, Dec. 28.—A cold wave sweeping down from the northwest has reached the lake region.

Since Tuesday noon the temperature here has fallen from 41 to 22 degrees above zero. It was said at the Government weather bureau that the temperature probably would fall ten degrees more in this section before to-night.

Heavy snows are reported in Wisconsin and parts of Michigan. Effects of the storm may be felt in all parts of the central west, according to the weather bureau.

Reports from northwestern states show the range to be from six above to 14 below zero.

RUSSIA IS SEVERE

Cruel Methods Are Used to Suppress the Persians

LITTLE NEW GIVEN OUT

London, Dec. 28.—The Russian Government has decided upon stern measures to suppress the disorders at Tabriz and other disturbed Persian towns. The dislocation of the telegraph lines makes it impossible to get a reliable narrative of the outbreaks. Yet it cannot be doubted that a situation of the gravest complexity has arisen.

As reports of Russian progress in Persia, and stories of the indiscriminate killing of natives in Tabriz and Resht, and of the destruction of Persia's Constitutional Government under Russian menaces, continue to reach England, the people are becoming increasingly disquieted at the British Government's attitude, which the Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey, thinks is a matter of policy and compelled by the Anglo-Russian agreement.

Doubts have also been increased as to whether Persian independence will ever be restored to even the feeble status it had before this last assault by Russia. If Parliament were sitting there would undoubtedly be severe questioning of the Government on this subject, and an arraignment of the Foreign Office.

The Times is the only paper which stoutly supports the Government, and it expresses considerable uneasiness over Russia's intentions as hinted in the St. Petersburg reports. The Manchester Guardian, the ablest and most influential provincial Liberal paper, deplores the British course and questions whether the Government could not have taken some stand earlier, but fears that it is too late now. In short, the whole affair is repugnant to Liberal sentiment.

Troops on the Move.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 28.—The latest reports from Tabriz announce that the telephone line to Julfa has been cut. Julfa is a small town in Transcaucasia, on the Aras River, something less than 100 miles from Tabriz. It was from this point that the Russian reinforcements were despatched to Tabriz several days ago.

About 200 Caucasian fidais, including a number of leaders, fled Tuesday night to Karadagh, with the intention, it is believed, of crossing the Russian frontier. A Russian guard has been placed over the Russian bank and the citadel, over which the Russian flag flies, is occupied by a Russian rifle regiment.

The Fifth Chasseurs, with an artillery detachment, has forced its way through to Baghichemal, a suburb of Tabriz, to join the Russian forces encamped there. There were several skirmishes along the road on the march from Julfa, and at sunset last night artillery and machine gun fire could be heard in the distance.

Will Punish Persians.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 28.—A semi-official statement issued last evening says that the Russian Government, in view of "acts of foolhardy aggression committed against the Russian forces and institutions in Tabriz, Resht and Enzeli, sometimes followed by brutal torture of the wounded and base outrages against the dead," has decided that the severest punishment of the guilty is merited, and Russian commanders, in conjunction with Russian consuls, are instructed to adopt the most stringent measures.

Atrocities by Russians.

London, Dec. 28.—The Persian committee, composed of prominent Englishmen interested in Persian affairs, has received the following telegram from the provincial assembly at Tabris, sent through the Persian Society of Constantinople:

"On Dec. 23, Russian troops attacked and seized the administration buildings. They trampled school children underfoot and killed and despoiled innocent men and women. They also looted the shops. The inhabitants after extraordinary forbearance began to defend themselves and forced the Russians to evacuate the Government offices.

"On Dec. 26, the Russians bombarded the city until sunset, consternation increasing hourly. On Dec. 25, in consequence of orders from the central Government to cease fighting, the inhabitants took no steps to defend themselves, but the Russians renewed the bombardment, firing from the environs of their consulate at women and other innocent persons. They wounded or made captives the wives and children of many respectable citizens and set fire to numerous buildings and mosques.

"The inhabitants still remained quiet on Dec. 26, but the ferocity of the Russians greatly increased. They killed many women and children, and a large number of buildings were burned by them. If to-morrow they do not desist from their savage attack, the inhabitants will be compelled to defend themselves.

"We beg you to communicate this telegram to the principal newspapers and influential centres of Europe."

Mercury In Porcupine.

Ottawa, Dec. 28.—"Discoveries of cinnabar, as mercury ore is called, have been made and several claims staked at Groundhog, on the Groundhog River, east of Cochrane," said Wm. Walsh, who has arrived from the mining country. "The stuff is said to be present in quantity, and a number of claims have been staked there. The find is the topic of conversation in Porcupine.

"As quicksilver is used to separate silver from its compounds, a market can be found for it right in the mining camp."

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

—BY—

J. W. BROWETT

Optometrist

Q. Why is it that glasses are worn so much more now than years ago?

A. Years ago the science of optics or correcting errors of sight was not understood as it is to-day; only old persons or those near-sighted wore Glasses. Now we correct with lenses all errors of sight.

Q. Why is it that cheap glasses do not give satisfaction?

A. Cheap glasses are so faulty in construction and are of such poor quality that they distort the vision and cause pain in the eyes. The optical glass used by us is brilliant, clear and perfect, insuring comfort and ease to the wearer.

Q. Can my headaches be relieved with glasses?

A. A personal visit will be necessary. Let us talk it over.

Worried Over Crown Prince.

Berlin, Dec. 28.—The possibility that Crown Prince Frederick William, who was prevented by a cold from coming to Berlin from Danzig to be present when the Crown Princess Cecilie gave birth to her fourth son on Dec. 19, will abandon Danzig as a residence during the winter, is being discussed in court circles.

The climate of Danzig, where the crown prince is serving in the army as colonel in command of the Death's Head Hussars, is, owing to its proximity to the Baltic Sea, rather raw and trying, and is said by his physicians to be unsuitable in winter for the heir to the throne.

Merger That Failed.

Chicago, Dec. 28.—Albert H. Veeder, attorney for Swift & Co., the first witness called by the Government in the trial of the ten Chicago packers, testified yesterday that the defendants made two efforts to organize a merger in the summer of 1902 and that their efforts to finance the enterprise were unsuccessful in both instances.

Mr. Veeder testified that E. H. Harriman, James Stillman and other New York financiers were to have furnished the capital, and the amount they were to receive as compensation was $10,000,000.

Fatal Explosion of Gasoline.

Peoria, Ill., Dec. 28.—As a result of an explosion of a gasoline tank at a cleaning establishment here yesterday, one man is dead and three other persons are probably fatally injured. All the victims were employed at the establishment.

John Adams, 16 years old, died on the way to the hospital. Fred Cool, B. Shanamaker and a woman whose identity has not been established, were badly burned and probably will not recover.

A Collar Combine Now.

Troy, N.Y., Dec. 28.—Twenty million dollars is the capitalization of the proposed collar combine, which may be announced on May 1, 1912, if negotiations which are being promoted by Max Osler of New York, representing Harvey, Fiske Co., bankers, do not fall through.

Found Miss Peter's Body.

Flint, Mich., Dec. 28.—The decomposed body of a young woman, later identified as that of Emma Peter of Toronto, Ont., missing since Nov. 4, was found in the Flint River here yesterday, at a point where wires had been stretched in the stream with the hope of catching Miss Peter's body.

The young woman came to Flint from Toronto, on Oct. 3. She at the time was suffering from nervous trouble, and her relatives believe this affected her mind. They believe she drowned herself while temporarily unbalanced.

WHY HIS TITLE IS DUKE, NOT PRINCE

Some misconception appears to prevail in some quarters as to why the Governor-General is called Duke of Connaught when, as a son of Queen Victoria, he was born a Prince of the Blood Royal. The explanation is as follows: All the Sovereign's children, and all their children (unless they themselves marry below Royal rank) are, of course, born Princes and Princesses. But the title of Prince or Princess is merely what is known as a courtesy title and carries with it no principality or kingdom—except, indeed, in the case of the Prince of Wales. Accordingly it has always been the custom of the Sovereigns of England to confer on their sons the title of Duke—which is the highest in the Peerage—in order to give them the right to sit and vote in Parliament, although, as a matter of fact, this is a right which they now seldom exercise. Three of Queen Victoria's sons drew their titles from the four countries of the United Kingdom. The eldest, who was Prince of Wales, also bore the English title of Duke of Cornwall. The second was created Duke of Edinburgh, in compliment to Scotland. And the third (our Governor-General), was made Duke of Connaught, as a mark of honor to Ireland, for which same reason he was also christened, among other names, Patrick. And thus it is he is known as the Duke of Connaught rather than as a Prince. The titles of Prince Arthur and Princess Patricia, the Duke's son and daughter, are titles of courtesy.

BIG LIBEL ACTION

A Daughter of Father Chiniquy Begins an Action for $10,000.

An action claiming $10,000 damages has been commenced at Montreal against La Croix, a local weekly paper, by Rebecca Chiniquy, daughter of Rev. Father Chiniquy, the famous priest who left the Roman Church. The ground of the suit it that La Croix said Chiniquy's wife was only a concubine, and, therefore, his daughter illegitimate.

The declaration of the plaintiff states that she is the legitimate daughter of Charles Chiniquy and Euphemie Allard, who were married on the 13th of January, 1864, by Rev. Desrocher, a minister of the Protestant Church, at St. Anne's of Illinois ,in the State of Illinois, according to the laws of said State of the American Union; that she is the legitimate wife of Joseph L. Morin, a professor of McGill University; that defendant published in his paper, La Croix, on the 16th of November last, an article in which it was said that Chiniquy, the apostle, could not be married, and that the woman who associated with him, namely, Euphemie Allard, was only a concubine; that the Chiniquy referred to in the article complained of is the legitimate father of plaintiff.

That before his marriage with the mother of plaintiff, Chiniquy had solemnly and officially repudiated the the Church of Rome on the 3rd day of August, 1858; that the Euphemie Allard referred to in the article is the legitimate mother of plaintiff; that the said article clearly and intentionally insinuates that plaintiff is of illegitimate birth; that said article was published with intent of insulting, and does insult, the memory of the father of the plaintiff.

The said article is also meant to throw discredit on the daughter of said Charles Chiniquy and Euphemie Allard, namely Dame Rebecca Chiniquy, the plaintiff; that said article is of a nature to injure plaintiff in her honor as well as in that of her father and mother, and injures her feelings, an dexposes her to the contempt and hatred of the inhabitants of the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Geo. Tovey, a young farmer near Perth succeeded in killing a very curious animal. It is somewhat larger than a common domestic cat, light gray in color and on its tail are a large number of dark rings. Its head and ears resemble those of a lynx. LAYS CLAIM TO LAND.

Joseph Elzear Lapointe, of North Bay, is attempting to secure possession of land valued at $400,000, in the parish of Longue Pointe, the property of the Dominion Park Company. The land is the site of Montreal's largest pleasure resort. Lapointe claims that in 1840 the land was left by his grandfather to the religious authorities of the parish of Longue Pointe on condition that a monument be erected to his memory, and that certain masses be sung and certain religious ceremonies be performed for the good of his soul. These conditions, Lapointe claims, have not been carried out, and he is, therefore, taking action to secure possession of the land.

the German Opera singer, who has started suit for libel against a German newspaper because that publication linked her name with that of the Countess Vaughan, the late King Leopold's morganatic wife, in speaking of the bestowal of a Leopold order of the second class. Miss Hempel did sing for the King and on that occasion received the order at her request from his hands, the other artists at the entertainment receiving various jeweled tokens, but, according to her statement, she had nothing to do with the countess.

QUEEN AMELIE

Manuel's Mother is Beginning to Appear in Public in England.

Queen Amelie of Portugal is breaking the strict retirement in which she passed the earlier months of her exile in England. She did a very kindly act in opening the sale of the Richmond Brabazon Society. This association of benevolent ladies who take an interest in London Workhouses strives to encourage the inmates to make fancy articles in their leisure time, to be sold by the Society for the makers' benefit; and it may be imagined how greatly it brightens the lot of the aged and feeble folk to have such a source of interest and occupation brought into their monotonous lives. Some of them show considerable talent in the manufacture of dainty trifles and ornamental needlework. Queen Amelie who was attended by the Comte de Figueiro and Mme. Saihanha de Gama, was received by the Mayor of Richmond, and performed the opening ceremony with gracious geniality. She then inspected the exhibits with great interest, and warmly expressed her surprise and pleasure at the skill of the poor workers who had produced such a variety of pretty and useful articles.

BERLIN LIBRARY

Founded 250 Years Ago, it Now Has 1,400,000 Books.

The latest report of the Royal Library in Berlin shows that it has at length beaten the great Bavarian rival in the number of its volumes. The Berlin library now possesses 1,460,000 books as against Munich's 1,116,000. When the Berlin Library was founded two hundred and fifty years ago it was housed in the then royal palace in a ground floor of six square cubic metres. The new Royal Library just finished for general purposes, contains 17,000 square cubic metres and has an annual increase of 57,000 volumes. Only a very modest sum, a little over $60,000 is at the library's command for the purchase of new books, while there is no law in Germany corresponding to those in England and France compelling the supply to the national library of a copy of every new book published. The high price of many modern books also tends to limit the acquisitions. The Berlin library is particularly rich in mediaeval script and manuscripts and its musical department is a well known feature. Twenty-two thousand cards were issued to readers last year two-thirds of them in the lending-out department. There are 900 visitors daily.

Kill the Dandruff Germs—Stop Hair Falling

Thousands of mothers are looking younger. Their gray hairs are gone. The natural color has come back, and with it a new growth of soft, glossy, luxuriant hair. Why should you look old before your time, when you can look years younger by using

Restores Gray Hair to Natural Color

If other "so-called" Restorers have failed, don't give up hope, but give WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY a trial. You run no risk. If it is not exactly as represented, your money will be refunded.

PROFIT BY OTHERS' EXPERIENCE

Gray Hair Restored
My hair was getting quite gray and falling out rapidly and I was troubled with a terrible itching of the scalp. My head was full of dandruff, which fell upon my clothes and kept me continually brushing it off. While on a visit to Rochester I heard of your Sage and Sulphur for the hair. I got a bottle and used it. A few applications relieved the itching, my hair stopped falling out and gradually came back to its natural color. It is now a nice dark brown color, soft, glossy and pliable. Several of my friends want to use it, and I want to know what you will charge me for six bottles of it.
MISS E. A. ROSS,
Sharon, Mercer Co., Pa.

Grew Hair on a Bald Head
For two or three years my hair had been falling out and getting quite thin until the top of my head was entirely bald. About four months ago I commenced using Sage and Sulphur. The first bottle seemed to do some good and I kept using it regularly until now I have used four bottles. The whole top of my head is fairly covered and keeps coming in thicker. I shall keep on using it a while longer, as I notice a constant improvement.

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH HOME

IT IS wonderful how much satisfaction can be obtained from a talk over the Bell Telephone.

A letter carries words, but the Bell Service has been brought up to such a point of perfection that the modulations of the voice are clearly heard.

The cheery tones show that the talker is well and in good spirits. The call may come from a suburban village or a distant city, but within the limits of the carrying power of the voice the Bell Service carries the tone as well. You get a personal interview with a friend hundreds of miles away.

HYDRO-AEROPLANE

Rises From the Surface of the Water And Safely Alights Again.

The clamorous demands among a large section of naval men for more activity in the department of British naval aeronautics will be mollified, but not met, by the report that experiments are at last being made with a hydro aeroplane at Barrow. Both the French and Americans have already progressed some distance towards providing their respective fighting fleets with such a flying machine to meet modern naval requirements, and the need for haste in the British service has now passed into the list of aerial matters marked urgent.

Commander Schwann is the first air pilot in this country to achieve success in rising from the surface of the water to commence a flight and safely alight again. The hydro aeroplane he navigated ascended only to the moderate altitude of about 40 feet. If this beginning is vigorously followed up by further trials, although behind at present, some of the lost ground may be recovered, and we may soon have a naval bird machine that can rise from and settle on the sea in the manner required from this kind of air craft for naval service. The number of naval officers now qualified and qutlifying for flying certificates is(unfortunately, far larger than the number of machines owned by the Admiralty and available for them to learn and practise on.

ELECTIONS IN GERMANY

Oratory, Party Circulars and Newspaper Campaigns the Rule.

General elections in Germany are always preceded by floods of oratory, party circulars, and newspaper campaigns. The first address of importance was that of Herr von Heydebrand, the Conservative leader, who declared that Germany had suffered a monstrous affront at the hands of England, and, as to the internal political situation, reiterated the well-worn maxims of the Prussian conservatives, including ultra-protectionism, especially for agriculture, no concessions to Socialism, and unconditional support of the monarch's prerogatives.

Baron von Wangenheim, president of the Agrarian League, has followed with a strong appeal for funds, telling his supporters to give not their dollars but their hundreds in the confidence that the money will bring "an extraordinary high rate of interest." The drift of his circular is a hint to the Government, represented by the Chancellor, who claims to be above all parties and unidentified with any, expressing fears that the Chancellor's whole character gives cause to suspect that he will be lead by a parliamentary majority, or in other words will legislate solely in the interests of the Conservatives and Agrarians.

As one of the newspaper comments puts it, "the chancellor must feel on reading the Agrarian spokesman's circular as if the carpiter's fingers were already feeling in preliminary fashion about his throat." Herr von Wangenheim, by the way, says that the new Reichstag will have to deal with the renewal of several German commercial treaties. This will probably lead to a revival of the Protectionist controversy in Germany. While there are still people who are satisfied that the Empire owes its prosperity to its Protective system, there are many more whom the excessive cost of living is driving in the direction of lower duties.

MADE BY PRISONERS' WIVES

Articles That Are Sold by the Duchess of Marlborough

The Duchess of Marlborough made an enormous success of her sale at Sunderland House of articles made by the wives of men undergoing terms of imprisonment. The Duchess knows just how to flatter the new-rich people. She sends out invitations for an "At Home" and the new-rich after displaying the card to all their friends go to Sunderland House and buy heavily. Then they go back to their suburban homes and relate to their envious friends "how sweet the Duchess was" to them.

The Duchess takes this pet charity of hers very seriously. She not only comes into personal contact with the prisoners' wives but she constantly interviews the prisoners themselves after their release and has managed to find employment for many of them. A delightful and true story concerns the Duchess and a released burglar whom she interviewed at the woodchopping yard at Holloway, where exprisoners are employed immediately after emerging from goal. "Have you any plans for the future?" asked the Duchess with her most winning smile. 'Yus, ma'am," said the burglar with some pride. "I've got the plans of two banks and a bloomin' post hoffice."

Fearful Headaches

Stomach Bad, No Appetite, Was Losing Weight and Strength

Wonderful Change When Health Was Restored by

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Headache is a symptom and not a disease in itself. It acts as a danger signal to warn you of serious trouble.

By reading Mr. Donneral's letter you will be satisfied that there is no treatment to be compared to Dr Chase's Nerve Food as a means of building up the system and removing the cause of headaches, sleeplessness and indigestion.

Mr. Charles Donneral, Kleinburg, Ont., writes: "I wish to communicate to you the great cure which I received from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food For over two years I suffered from fearful headaches, my appetite was always poor, and the stomach bad. I took medicines from physicians, but the headaches persisted, and I was rarely free from them.

"Reading about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I began using it, with little idea that I would be benefitted. I had become thin and weak, but the very first box helped me, and with continued treatment I have been cured and feel like a new man. The headaches have disappeared, y appetite is good and digestion excellent. I write this letter in hope that other sufferers from headache may use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and be cured."

Stops a Deep-seated Cough in a Hurry

A Family Supply of Unequaled Cough Remedy for 50c—Money Refunded if it Fails.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large proportion of plain syrup—a good ingredient, but one that anyone can make. A pint of granulated sugar, with ½ pint of warm water, stirred for 2 minutes, gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, mixed in a 16-oz. bottle with home-made sugar syrup, gives you 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-mixed for $2.50. There's a clear saving of $2.00. Full directions in package.

And money couldn't buy a quicker, better remedy. Takes hold at once, gives almost instant relief, and usually stops the most obstinate, deep-seated cough in 24 hours. It stimulates the appetite, is slightly laxative, and has a pleasant taste —children take it willingly. Splendid for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains and other throat troubles, and unequaled for prompt results in whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of imported Norway White Pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other natural healing pine elements. Simply mix it as directed with sugar syrup or strained honey, and it is ready for use.

Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

DEAD MAN IN THEATRE

Discovered Sitting Erect in the Shadow in the Court Box.

A ghastly discovery was made in the chief theatre in Warsaw. On entering the Court box to dust the seats for the evening performance, the attendants saw a figure sitting very erect in the shadow. The lights being turned on, they discovered that the figure was the corpse of a well-dressed man and that his pockets had been rifled. A doctor who was called declared that the man had been dead for many hours. Thieves, who, presumably, were responsible for the crime, had carefully propped the body up in the chair at the back of the box. The victim has not yet been identified.

NEW CIGARET CARDS DISEASE CARRIERS?

Health Officer Traces Sore Mouths to Boys Playing With Them

Germ infection through cigarette cards is the latest danger to health. Dr. Hastings, Medical Health Officer, Toronto, tells the following remarkable incident:

"In one of the city schools recently it was noticed that a large number of children had sores around their mouths and on their faces. Those affected were all boys; no girls were infected.

"A lady at the noon hour noticed a number of boys on the way home from school playing with cigarette cards in the following manner: One of the boys would take the cigarette picture card, put it between his teeth, then smartly snap it with his finger and try to strike another boy with the spinning card. The card would fall to the dirty pavement, would then be picked up by the other boy, and put into his mouth. As the lady watched, she saw the same card pass into seven different mouths, some of them with sores upon them. Finally she picked up the card, and found it so absolutely filthy that neither the picture nor the writing could be seen for dirt.

"The homes of some of the boys with the sore faces were visited, and the mothers of some complained that their boys had been playing this game around the house, until they had been driven almost frantic.

"This is a concrete case of contact infection which has happened, and is happening right now, in Toronto; a contact infection by means of a very simple game, the effect of which can be seen by anyone."

IN THE SLEEPING-CAR

It was in the early days of sleeping cars, when they measured the sheets by square inches and weighed the blankets on letter-scales. It was also a suffering passenger who, tossing and jolting throughout the dark and chilly night, wondered whether, by error, he was sleeping between towels, and would possibly find the sheets hanging over the towel-horse next morning.

"Porter," he cried, as the train gave a particularly vicious jolt and dragged his last sheet of bedclothing aside, 'bring me a corkscrew!"

The porter came hurrying along the aisle.

"Sorry, sir," he said, respectfully, 'but we don't allow drinking in the berths."

"I don't want to drink," retorted the suffering passenger. "I merely want to extract a pillow that has worked its way into my ear."

SALE AT RIDEAU HALL

The Vice-Regal Throne Brought Only Few Dollars.

At the auction sale at Rideau Hall, Ottawa, fittings which have been replaced by more modern ones were placed under the auctioneer's hammer. The sale had been advertised in the public press, but failed to attract a crowd of distinction. Scraps of ladies who have the smallest kind of knowledge of the aristocracy of Canada. But by far the largest number of prospective buyers were Russian Jews, who drive rag and bottle trade about Ottawa and deal in junk. The throne used by the Governor-General was one of the first things put up. Why it was sold is not known, for it was a rather handsome thing, and did not appear to be an article which would be required anywhere except at a Vice-Regal establishment. That seemed to be the general impression. As four dollars was all that persistent auctioneering could get for it, and it was knocked down to a peddlar. A hand-carved black walnut sideboard, at least twenty-five feet long, which would make a load for a four-horse team, realised just seven dollars. It cost seven hundred if it cost a cent.

One of the most interesting things which went under the hammer was a lot of visitors' books. When one calls on the Governor-General he or she goes to the front door of Rideau Hall, asks the footman for "the book," and signs his name. The process is so easy that there is a lot of signing, and a pile of name-filled books have accumulated. There are some distinguished names in those books. There are names of titled persons in the books, members of Parliament, Ministers of the Crown, and of the Gospel, and, in fact, the names of everyone worth while who has come to Ottawa since Confederation. They would make fine hunting-ground for the autograph collector. They did not mean much to the auctioneer, or to an old ragman for 25 cents each.

NOTABLE SENTENCES

Truths Tersely Put in Some Speeches of the Day

Popularity is not always a test that a thing is at its best.

Our boasted civilization rests on very insecure foundations.

The only patriotism is not that of men who clamor for other people to fight.

The trend of modern thought is to regard the Bible as literature rather than revelation.

It is a great privilege of any Englishman to be permitted to take part in the government of his country.

The highest aim of the statesmanship of a country ought to be to raise the man who is a menace to society.

Men are growing mightily discontented with selfishness, which is responsible for the grinding misery of poverty.

Parents and children must unite to show children that life does not mean merely drifting along the line of least resistance.

This is the most educated age that ever has been: everybody seems anxious to educate somebody else at a third party's expense.

As long as people put on particularly expensive clothes to go to church it will be very difficult for a large number of people to attend.

An indispensable note in the temper of reformers towards the wrongs of our time is a feeling something akin to personal shame and contrition.

People have been taught to believe that poverty is due to Providence, and when it is not due to Providence, they attribute it to drink.

STATUE OF COL. GZOWSKI

Words Which Aldershot Officers Have Put on the Monument.

On one side of the memorial erected at Aldershot in memory of Lieut. Gzowski, of the Queen's Own Rifles Toronto, appear the following words: "This monument was erected by the officers of the Aldershot Command, in honor of their Canadian Comrade, and in token of the fellowship which binds England to Canada, and all soldiers of the Empire to one another." On the other side are these words: "To the glory of God and in memory of Roy Gzowski, Lieut. of the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada, who died whilst doing duty with his regiment in the Mother Country. Born at Toronto, Jan. 10th, 1890, died at Aldershot, Sept. 25th, 1910." On the edging are these words: "Canada to England Then lead and your sons will follow, or follow and we will lead, and, side by side, though the world deride, we will show by word and deed that you share with me my youthfulness and I with you your prime, and so it shall be till the sun shall set on the uttermost edge of time."

"THE EXAMINER"

Average Daily Circulation over 3,500

Mr. ADVERTISER

Did you ever stop to think how long it would take you to personally solicit 18,000 people ? Quite a while, wouldn't it ? Sure it would ! These people can be reached directly and personally in one single issue of THE EXAMINER. Figure it out for yourself, taking the admitted plan of an average of five people reading a newspaper each day, and with our circulation of over 3,500 daily, you have the number of people---and the people who buy---that see your advertisement.

No other medium of publicity in Peterborough covers the ground as thoroughly as THE EXAMINER. Going as it does into a majority of the homes, it is the medium through which you must make known the merchandise you have to sell, real estate to sell, or in fact any publicity that you desire brought in a convincing manner before readers of newspapers.

A DRAMA IN REAL LIFE

How It Was Unfolded to the Man Who Tells It

By WILLIS BARKER

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When the civil war closed the south had for four years been suffering from a depletion of everything needful to human beings. It occurred to me that I might turn an honest penny by loading a wagon with household articles, including provisions, drive it through the country and sell to the inhabitants.

I started from Nashville, Tenn., with a two horse team, proposing to drive down to Shelbyville, then ascending the Cumberland plateau and working toward east Tennessee. Not far from Shelbyville I overtook a man on horseback whose mount had gone lame. He asked me where I was going, and when I told him he said he believed he would leave his horse and proceed on my wagon. To accommodate him and for company I agreed to take him, and at the next farm we came to we stopped to leave his horse.

While he was dickering for the animal's keep we heard the tread of a loping horse up the road, and a girl on its back came hurrying along. The man who was to join me on seeing her looked annoyed and went toward her, evidently with the intention of meeting her where they would not be overheard in what they said. They talked for some time, the man apparently trying to persuade her to do or refrain from doing something. He was evidently not making much headway with her, and finally they came toward me.

"This is Nancy Parks," he said. "She would like to join us, go over the plateau and take a train at Bridgeport for Knoxville."

"I would be very happy to have her," I replied.

The girl dismounted, and the man led her horse away to the barn, where his own had been put, and left him there. Miss Parks was an excellent specimen of the poor white girl of the south. She wore a sunbonnet, a calico dress and coarse cowhide shoes. Nevertheless there was something of wild beauty about her. Her cheeks were a brown and red, her hair and eyes jet black, the hair being cut square just above her shoulders. She climbed up into the rear of the wagon, mounting by means of the wheel, and settled herself comfortably among some bags of coffee. The man got up beside me.

By the time we had reached the foothills of the Cumberland plateau we had told me that his name was Barker and that he was a northerner looking for a place in the south on which to settle. This was false, as I afterward learned. He was in quest of something very different from this. As for the girl, he intended to tell me the truth about her, saying that he had spent a day or two on her father's farm. She had taken a sudden fancy to him, and when he parted with her she had made a great ado at the separation, with the result that she had followed him. He said he didn't know what to do with her, but thought when a favorable opportunity occurred he would "shake" her. The story about her taking a train at Bridgeport was a blind.

I didn't care what either of them did so long as I was not mixed up in their affairs.

Barker whenever we stopped at a farm or in the road to talk with any one asked a good many questions about the country, the soil and the people, bearing, so far as I could judge, upon his own settlement among them. He asked different persons with whom we chatted about a man named Elijah Hanks. No one seemed to be inclined to give any definite information about Mr. Hanks, some saying they had a very slight acquaintance with him, others that they didn't wish to know him at all. Barker seemed to be trying to get a description of Hanks by which he would recognize him. I noticed that when Barker inquired of one person about Hanks the man gave him a quick, suspicious glance.

Meanwhile Nancy Parks sat in the back of the wagon munching some apples she found there and of which I invited her to partake. She seemed to be satisfied in simply being with Barker, and I could not see that she took any interest in what was going on. Soon after we got up on to the plateau we met a man whom Barker stopped to ask questions about the country and the people and if he knew of a good farm for sale. The man replied in a deep sonorous voice. I happened to turn as he did so toward the back of the wagon and noticed a marked change in Nancy. The voice of the man Barker was questioning seemed to thrill her. She listened intently to every word he spoke. This time Barker confined himself to inquiries about general matters, not seeking information as to special persons. Elijah Hanks was not mentioned.

We drove on, and I, turning for another glance at Nancy Parks, saw her eyes fixed intently upon the man we were leaving behind, while his face was turned toward us with an expression of wonder. Then she pointed in the direction opposite to the one we were going, indicating that he was to go back. The man stood irresolute for a while, then slowly followed the others to the girl's apparent discomfiture.

Coming to a little place called Tracy, Barker said he thought he would leave me, giving as a reason that he had heard of a farm for sale in the locality and he would look it up. Since it was evening, I concluded to go no further that day, and, driving my team into a wood, I unharnessed my horses, fed them, made some coffee and prepared to spend the night there. Barker, who by this time seemed to repose in me a confidence that I didn't care to have, told me that the girl was going to sleep in a house in Tracy, and when she awoke in the morning he would be missing.

I made no reply to this. I was not especially prejudiced in his favor, and there was something about the girl that drew me to her. I confess I had come to believe that some game was being played between the two, and I had sufficient curiosity to be interested in it. There are so many possible complications in any affair in which a woman is concerned that I had no faith in any theory I formed with regard to the couple. It appeared, however, that they were deceiving each other.

About 9 o'clock Barker and I turned in. The night being pleasant I didn't sleep in the wagon, nor did he. I slept a few hours when something awakened me. Barker was standing near with his back to me. He had something in his hands, and, although I could not see what it was, I knew by a series of clicks that it was a revolver which he was examining, cocking it and lowering the hammer to revolve the chambers. Then he put it in his hip pocket, and, taking another pistol from his other hip, he examined that in the same way. He next looked at his watch, trying to make out the time of night, then, stepping stealthily, moved away from the bivouac.

My curiosity in the little play that was going on so near me impelled me to get up and follow the man. He took a road leading southward down toward a little town at the foot of the plateau called Jasper. I dared not walk near him lest my steps be heard. I therefore kept about a hundred yards in his rear. I was in danger of losing him, but I would rather do so than have him know that I followed him. I finally did lose him, but soon again caught sight of him or what I supposed was he. What was my surprise, keeping my eye on the figure before me, upon its passing over a rise in the ground and showing its silhouette against the sky to see the garments of a woman instead of a man.

Had Barker taken on a disguise? Had I lost him and fired my guns on another? An explanation soon developed. Against the sky I saw two figures. They looked to be side by side, but one was in rear of the other. I could see the legs of one; the other from the waist down was bell shaped like a woman's dress.

As I looked the man turned to the right and entered a wood. Then I saw the woman do the same. I entered the wood at the point as near as I could determine it that they had entered and soon found myself in a ravine. It was dark as pitch in there, and I could not choose my steps. Occasionally I would catch a faint sound as one of the persons I followed dislodged a stone or broke a stick under foot. Guided by such indications I pushed on till suddenly I was halted by a sound of another kind.

It was the crack of a pistol or rifle.

All was still for a few minutes. Then I heard some one harry past me up the declivity, but I could not see who it was. I stood listening till I heard a groan coming from below. Then I went down as rapidly as I could in the dark and after going some distance stopped and listened. Another groan nearer guided me, and, moving toward it, I soon came to an opening in the trees admitting enough starlight to show me a body lying on the ground. I bent over it, at the same time asking:

"Who are you?"

"I'm Barker. Is that you?"

"Yes, it's I. What's the trouble?"

"I've been shot."

"Badly hurt?"

"I think I'm done for. I must give you some information at once. I'm John Archard, a United States government detective employed to hunt up those illicit mountain whisky stills and bring those who run them to justice. I've come here after a man who is running a still. Some one who got on to what I was after has followed and shot me."

"Whom do you suspect?"

"I'm at a loss to know. It may be that Nancy Parks, suspecting that I was intending to 'shake' her, watched and followed me, not knowing anything of my mission and thinking my object to be simply to get rid of her."

A very different theory occurred to me. Judging from what I had seen, I surmised that in Nancy Parks he had happened on one who loved the man he was after. I reckoned that man to be Elijah Hanks. Likely the government man had led Nancy to size him up for what he really was and to feel assured that he proposed to arrest her lover. She had pretended to be infatuated with Archard and followed him to keep him in view till she could warn her lover. Having failed to make Hanks understand her when she saw him from the wagon, she had stuck to the man who was trying to get him, followed him and shot him just before he was about to raid the still.

This turned out to be the true version of the story. But I kept my knowledge of it a secret, and Nancy Parks was never accused of the shooting. The government man recovered, but was never convinced that Nancy was not interested with him.

A Waste of Money.

Of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the famous composer, who recently celebrated his sixty-fourth birthday, Mr. Cyril Maude tells an amusing story. Sir Alexander composed the music for Mr. Maude's production of "The Little Minister" at the Haymarket, and he found the rehearsals very trying. One day he came up to Mr. Maude, despair written all over his face. "I say, Maude," he stammered, "do you—do you—confound it, do you mind if I smash my hat?" At the end of the run of "The Little Minister," however, the management, to show their appreciation, sent Sir Alexander a very handsome present. The composer has an old and privileged servant, and when the present arrived she was sent for to inspect it. She looked at it unmoved. "Deary me!" was her only comment. "What a waste of money!"

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Dec. 27.—The foreign demand for Manitoba spring wheat was good at advanced prices, but the volume of business was curtailed considerably on account of the fact that the bulk of the orders were for January shipment, for which no ocean freight room is obtainable, but some sales were made for February-March. There was some enquiry for oats, with 42c bid for No. 1 feed from Bristol.

There was an improved demand on spot for all lines of coarse grains and a fair trade was done. Oats were stronger at an advance of ½c. Early in the day sales of several cars of new No. 3 yellow corn were made at 71½c and 72c, but at the close 72½c to 73c was asked on account of the advance in Chicago. Demand for flour was better for local account, but the export trade is quiet. Bran and shorts were fairly active. Cheese is quiet. Demand for butter is good and prices have an upward tendency. Eggs, active and firm. Dressed hogs have advanced 25c per cwt.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Dec. 27.—At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market the receipts of live stock for the week ending Dec. 23 were 1100 cattle, 1600 sheep and lambs, 1800 hogs and 400 calves, while the offerings on the market this morning amounted to 400 cattle, 800 sheep and lambs, 1200 hogs and 200 calves.

A feature of the trade was the stronger feeling in the market for cattle and prices since this day week show an advance of 10c to 15c per cwt., which was attributed to the small supply and the increased demand for good to choice stock, but there was no improvement in the market for common or inferior cattle, as the stock of such on hand is still far in excess of the requirements. A few choice steers sold as high as $6.90 per cwt., but the bulk of the trade was done in good cattle at $6 to $6.35.

The tone of the market for lambs was stronger and prices since this day week have advanced 15c to 25c per cwt., on account of the limited supply coming forward, for which the demand is good for local consumption, as consumers do not care for frozen stock as in former years. There was no change in the condition of the market for sheep, but the undertone is firm with a fair demand. The market for calves was quiet and as the stock offered was not very good, the top price paid was $10.

The market for hogs was rather irregular, some reporting easier than this day last week at a decline of 10c to 25c per cwt., and others stating that it was stronger and reported sales of selected lots as high as $7.25, while some packers said that they bought all they wanted at $6.90 to $7.10 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

Export cattle, choice, $6.35 to $6.50 per cwt.; medium, $5 to $5.35; common, $3.50 to $4.50; canners, $2 to $2.25; choice cows, $5.50 to $5.75; medium, $4.75 to $5.25; bulls, $4.50 to $5.50; milkers, choice, each, $75; common and medium, each, $30 to $60; springers, $50 to $80. Sheep, ewes, $4 to $4.25; bucks and culls, $3.50 to $3.75; lambs, $6.25 to $6.50. Hogs, f.o.b., $6.90 to $7.25. Calves, $3 to $10.

East Buffalo Cattle Market.

EAST BUFFALO, Dec. 27.—Cattle—Receipts, 50 head; market steady; prime steers, $7.90 to $8; butcher grades, $5.70 to $6.75.

Calves—Receipts, 100 head. Market active, 25c higher. Common to prime, $3 to $9.75.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 7400 head; market fairly active; firm; choice lambs, $6.30 to $6.40; cull to fair, $4.75 to $6; yearlings, $4.50 to $5; sheep, $3 to $4.

Village Nearly Wiped Out.

Trenton, Dec. 28.—The village of Frankford, about eight miles northeast of Trenton, was almost wiped out by a terrible fire which broke out last evening and was still blazing this morning. The fire started about 8.30 in the Streetman Hotel block, on the Frankford main street. In a very few minutes this was destroyed, and the flames spread to the Brennen Hotel adjoining. The fire then crossed to the south side of the street, which is the residential section, and four or five houses were wiped out in a very short time. Catching the north part of the business section, Rose's blacksmith shop and harness store were cleaned out, and before long all the south side of the main street from the Streetman block to the Bell Telephone office was destroyed.

Calls were sent in turn to Trenton, Belleville and Picton for assistance, but none was forthcoming. Trenton was unable to respond because it has only one engine. Belleville and Picton had to turn down the stricken village because they have no late train service.

Putrid Fish Kills 28.

Berlin, Germany, Dec. 28.—Thirty-six homeless men, who sought with decayed smoked herring to add to the favor of the frugal meal of bread and soup served to them at the municipal lodging-house on Tuesday night, are dead. More than forty others are sick, several of whom are believed to be dying.

The cause of death has not yet been announced, but the authorities are confident that putrid fish was responsible. The autopsies appear to substantiate this view. All those known to have partaken of the fish are dead or in such condition to be unable to throw any light on the subject. It is believed, however, that one of the victims found the fish in the garbage pile of a nearby market and divided them among his companions. The men became sick early yesterday morning and in some cases death followed rapidly, in from two to three hours.

Commission Holds Meeting.

Ottawa, Dec. 28.—After calling upon Premier Borden, the Minister of Public Works and the civil service commissioners, the members of the recently-appointed commission which will conduct an enquiry into all the Government departments, held their first meeting yesterday afternoon.

The three commissioners, Hon. A. B. Morine (chairman), R. S. Lake and G. N. Ducharme, discussed the question of securing quarters, and decided to meet to-day to consider the question of appointing counsel, secretary and other officers necessary to the proper carrying on of the work in hand.

It is quite probable that the quarters recently vacated by the railway board will be secured by the commissioners, who propose to get established in Ottawa and commence the work of hearing evidence early in January.

Biscay's Death Toll.

Gibraltar, Dec. 28.—Still another vessel, the German steamer Chios, foundered with nearly all hands in the Bay of Biscay.

The Chios, belonging to the German Levant Line, was proceeding from Hamburg to Alexandria on Thursday last when she was caught in the hurricane and sank with all but two of her crew, the chief officer and one sailor, who were picked up by a passing vessel.

The Chios was built at Hamburg in 1891 and registered 2,590 tons net.

Killed Entire Family.

Little Rock, Ark., Dec. 28.—News reached this city yesterday afternoon that the entire family of T. J. Grant, consisting of himself, his wife and six children, have been murdered. Grant resides 12 miles from Benton, Ark.

The evidence tends to show, it is declared, that Grant killed his wife and children, and then took his own life. Details regarding the tragedy are few.

Enquiring Into No Temere Case.

Winnipeg, Dec. 28.—John O'Connor, barrister, has been retained by a Catholic society to conduct an enquiry into the facts of the no temere case recently aired here. He is now examining witnesses and rumor says if the outcome is favorable, action may be taken against Winnipeg publishers to vindicate the attitude of the church in this matter.

Art and Part.

Art and part is a Scotch law term denoting complicity in both contrivance and perpetration of crime, similar to the words accessory and principal as used in our jurisprudence.

Conservatives Lead in P.E.I.

Charlottetown, P.E.I., Dec. 28.—Premier Mathieson was yesterday elected by acclamation with his colleague, Temple MacDonald, to the Prince Edward Island Legislature. Other acclamations are: John MacLean, Conservative, in the first district of Kings; Hon. John Kickham, Conservative, also in the first district of Kings, and John A. Macdonald, Conservative, in the third district of Kings.

WHY SHE CHOSE HIM.

She chose him out of all the crowd
Of men that came and went,
His voice was low, his tie was loud,
But she was well content.

The first man's education was Perhaps more finished, and
Another's manners gave her cause
As being stitch more grand.

Another's garments fitted him;
Another's hair was curly;
Another's name was Arthur—Jim
Was chosen by this girlie.

And not for wealth and not for love
Was Jim by Mildet chosen—
But that he was the one man of
The whole lot that proposed!

—Boston Traveler.

Rude.

Bird—What are you squinting at, you rude boy? Didn't you ever see a bird before?

Too Small For Him.

Spanish grandees delight in numerous names, even appropriating those that belong to their wives' families. One of these distinguished dons, wandering too far into the country, went astray on a lonely road late at night. He knocked at the door of a small inn, the landlord of which from an upper window shouted:

"Who is there?"

"Don Diego de Mendoza Silva Ribero Guzman Pimetal Osorio Ponce de Leon Gumasa Aerera Tellez y Giron," replied the grandee.

"In that case," interrupted the innkeeper, closing his window, "go; there is not room enough here for half of you!"—New York Telegram.

Coal Dust.

Coal dust is wasted unless the mistress sees that it is burned, and yet it makes beautiful fires. Have a galvanized iron scuttle for the purpose. Add sufficient water to the coal to make it moist. When a fire is burning brightly bank it up with this wet dust, and you will have a clear fire which will last for hours.

Start of Day.

Among ancient Athenians and Jews day began at sunrise. Romans started their day at midnight, which is the rule with us moderns.

Simple Salt Making.

The process of making salt at the springs in Salinas, Mexico, is very simple. The water, which contains 4 to 7 per cent salt, is pumped into tanks. It is then evaporated to 25 to 28 per cent, beginning to crystallize at 18 per cent. The water is then drained off and the salt swept out.

PETERBOROUGH THURSDAY DECEMBER 28 1911

ST. JOHN'S NIGHT OBSERVED BY PETERBOROUGH MASONS OFFICERS ARE INSTALLED

Very Enjoyable Affair Held in the Masonic Hall Last Night—Presentation to Rt. Wor. Bro. J. Crane.

SOME BRIGHT SPEECHES

St. John's Night, the red letter night in Masonic circles, was right royally celebrated by the members of Corinthian Lodge No. 101 and Peterborough Lodge No. 155, A. F. and A. M. last night, when the installation of officers and the customary banquet took place in the Masonic Hall. There was a very large attendance of the members of both lodges, while there was a goodly contingent of outside visitors as well, including a large quota from Omemee.

After the work of installation had been carried out the gathering sat down to a most enjoyable repast which was done ample justice to. Then followed a toast list that was marked by some eloquent speeches.

"The King and the Craft" was the first toast honoured and was observed by the singing of God Save the King and O Canada, led by Wor. Bro. W. McIlroy.

Bro. Will Moore of Toronto was heard to advantage in a well rendered vocal solo.

Rt. Wor. Bro. Col. Ponton of Belleville, replied most eloquently to the toast "The Grand Master and the Grand Lodge in Canada," after which Bro. Moore contributed another solo that was well received.

An interesting event took place at this stage in the presentation of a Grand Lodge Regalia to Rt. Wor. Bro. John Crane, D.D.G.M. The presentation was made by Wor. Bro. Dr. M. A. Morrison.

The toast of "The Newly Installed Officers," was replied to by Wor. Bro. F. D. Kerr and Wor. Bro. A. Davidson, the newly elected Masters of Corinthian and Peterborough Lodges respectively.

Bro. F. J. Sayers and Bro. Rev. I. Cowle were the speakers when the toast to "The Visiting Brethren" was honoured.

Justice to the "Absent Brethren" was done by Rt. Wor. Bro. H. R. H. Kenner.

Rt. Wor. Bro. John Crane, D.D.G. M. made a fitting response to the toast of "The Installing Master," after which the event was brought to an end with the Junior Warden's toast.

Rt. Wor. Bro. John Crane was chairman and Rt. Wor. Bro. H. Rush vice-chairman.

HAVE TO STOP FAST DRIVING

Recently the Council passed a resolution to the effect that fast driving was not to be permitted across the Hunter street bridge, and they had a sign placed at either end of the bridge, forbidding any person to drive across the bridge faster than a walk. The sign and resolution and everything else are not being observed, and this is a warning to those concerned.

AN INVESTIGATION

Special to The Examiner.

BERLIN, GERMANY, DEC. 28. — More deaths have occurred at the Municipal poor house to-day, bringing the total deaths as a result of eating diseased smoked herring, up to sixty-five, with eighty others still in the hospital in a critical condition. The civic authorities have been ordered by the government to take drastic measures. Fourteen arrests of civic contractors and officials have been made.

Big Fire At Golden City

$50,000 Conflagration—Hundreds in Tents

Special to The Examiner.

GOLDEN CITY, PORCUPINE, DEC. 28.—Nearly half the town has to be dynamited to stay the progress of a fire which broke out at two o'clock this morning in Roumanic saloon. Nearly every building which escaped the fire last July was destroyed to-day, including the Lyric theatre, where the relief committee directed operations at the last fire. The total damage will be fifty thousand dollars, while the insurance is practically nil. Hundreds are living in tents again, with the thermometer around the zero mark.

Inspected The Strap

The size of the strap used for punitive purposes in the school was a subject of discussion at the meeting of the ratepayers of North Monaghan held in May's School House, yesterday for the election of a school trustee. Some of the ratepayers held that the rubber strap was too heavy for the children and the article was produced and inspected, but no action was taken.

Mr. J. Robinson was re-elected school trustee, and Mr. Bruce Johnston, auditor.

Mr. Saunders occupied the chair.

THE VILLAGE OF FRANKFORD ALMOST TOTALLY DESTROYED BY BIG FIRE

Blaze Raged for Hours With No Assistance Possible—People Were Almost Frantic in Their Efforts to Secure Help From the Neighbouring Towns—High Wind Fanned the Flames and They Made Rapid Progress Through the Business Section.

TRENTON, DEC. 27.—The village of Frankford, about eight miles northeast of Trenton, was almost wiped out by a terrible fire which broke out this evening and was still blazing late to-night. The fire started about 8.30 in the Streetman Hotel block, on the Frankford main street. In a very few minutes this was destroyed, and the flames spread to the Bremner Hotel adjoining. The fire then crossed to the south side of the street, where is the residential section, and four or five houses were wiped out in a very short time. Catching the north part of the business section Ross' blacksmith shop and harness store were cleaned out, and before long all the south side of the main street from the Streetman block to the Bell Telephone office, was destroyed.

Calls were sent in turn to Trenton, Belleville and Picton, for assistance, but none was forthcoming. Trenton was unable to respond because it has only one engine. Belleville and Picton had to turn down the stricken village because they have no late train service. The people of Frankford were nearly frantic, running everywhere for help, and not knowing what to do. Helped by the farmers ad workmen from the Glen Miller paper mills, they organized a bucket brigade, and did what they could to prevent the flames from spreading, but owing to the intense heat they were unable to do much. With a high wind prevailing, it was evident that nothing could prevent the whole village from being wiped out, and the only hope was in the wind dropping. Streetman's was a frame building, but the Breman was of brick. So far the fire has destroyed two hotels, six or eight stores, and five or six dwellings.

Late at night other assistance was obtained from Stirling and Glen Miller. One more residence, that of Mrs. Ferguson, has been destroyed since the previous report. Very little furniture and few personal belongings were saved from the flames.

A PECULIAR ACCIDENT

Mr. Angus McIntosh Struck in Leg by Exploding Cartridge Embedded in Ice

WAS NOT INJURED

To be shot in the leg with a 22 calibre bullet and yet suffer no inconvenience, was the experience of Mr. Angus McIntosh, caretaker of the Charlotte street curling rink, this morning. Mr. McIntosh was industriously engaged in removing the ice from in front of the rink, when his shovel struck a 22 calibre cartridge which was embedded in the ice, causing it to explode, the bullet striking Mr. Intosh in the calf of the right leg. The ball did not strike with sufficient force to penetrate the clothing. The empty shell, which was found a short distance away, following the explosion, proved to be a 22 calibre short cartridge with the letter D stamped on the end, indicating that it was a product of the Dominion Cartridge Co.

SNOW STORM NOT GENERAL

HEAVY IN EAST

The big snow storm, which struck this district last night, was not at all general, according to reports today. As the engineer jumped down from the big passenger engine at the C. P. R. station at noon to-day, he was approached by an Examiner reporter with a "How are the Weather conditions up west?" "Oh," he replied. "this big snow storm that struck this place has not been general at all. They did not get more than two inches of snow in Toronto, and not until I got very near the city was there any evidence of a heavy snow storm. Further east, I am told, they had even a heavier storm than you got here." The train showed no evidence of having passed through a snow-covered country.

THE THEFT OF A WATCH

Young Man Pleaded Guilty to the Charge of Stealing Timer at Police Court To-day

REMANDED FOR SENTENCE

Howard Murney was charged with stealing a watch valued at $20, from Wm. Worboy on Friday last. He pleaded guilty and was remanded for a week at the request of the Chief. The Chief stated that both Murney and Worboy were under the influence of liquor when the watch was taken. "What benefactors those hotel men are," remarked the Magistrate. "They keep you all busy," he remarked to the Chief, "and of course they elevate your morals very much (?)" he added, turning to the accused.

Murney was allowed out on $500 bail furnished by himself.

Thos. Jackson was charged with being drunk in a public place yesterday. He pleaded guilty, but requested to be given a chance, promising to leave the city at once. He stated that he came from Toronto and was on his way to Montreal. "Drinking is my misfortunte," he grumbled, "but if your Worship will give me a chance, I will get out of the city and will try and leave the drink alone." "I'll give you a chance, then," said the Magistratae, "but if you come here again, I'll send you to the Central. We don't want men like you around here."

SAY RUSSIA WAS GREEDY

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 28.—Although it is unlikely that the British Government will take action, the way in which Russia has gobbled up Mongolia was much discussed on the streets to-day. The feeling here is that Russia wanted to make sure of her slice of China whether there was any general carving up or not.

LINDSAY'S EX-"BENEFACTOR" GOES TO STATE'S PRISON SENTENCE IS INDETERMINATE

D. B. Thomas, the Man of Many Aliases, Sentenced at Brookeridge, Minnesota, for Swindling

LONG LIST OF CRIMES

BRECKENRIDGE, MINN., DEC. 28.—D. B. Thomas, alias David B. Myers, alias David B. McCain, the fake "promoter" of a shoe factory in Lindsay, Canada, and who swindled Burrows & Shepherd of this place, out of $11,000, besides forging a warranty deed, was sentenced on Thursday, Dec. 13, to an indeterminate sentence at hard labour at the State Prison at Stillwater.

Thomas pleaded 'not guilty' to the charge against him, and offered no evidence in his defence in the trial. The State had a number of strong witnesses. The jury was out only 10 minutes.

David B. Myers, (as he called himself) represented himself to be from Freeport, Ill., arrived in Breckenridge, Minn., last June, and proceeded to make arrangements with Plaisted Bros., land agents, for the purchase of some land.

He then proceeded to sell it to Burrows & Shepherd for $11,000.

Francis Gory, Payneaville, was the owner of the land, and Myers went to Farg to meet him. He returned with the warrantee deed properly executed, but Burrows & Shepherd began to get suspicious, and, on making enquiries it was found that he was not known in Freeport, and also that Mr. Gory had not heard of him. Myers had forged Gory's name in the deed. The penalty for the offence is not more than twenty years in the state prison.

The prisoner confessed to a string of operations covering two years, since his release from the state penitentiary of Indiana, where he served two years for forgery.

His right name is David B. McCain and he is twenty-eight years old. His home is in Marion, Ind., where he has a wife and three children. He has left his family and admits that he spends his money on fast women.

"HEART" BABY PASSES AWAY

TORONTO, DEC. 28.— One of the most peculiar cases known to the medical profession in Toronto is that of the little "heart baby," as it was called, which died at the Hospital for Sick Children, after living for nearly two weeks with its heart outside its body. The cause of the phenomenon was the absence of the front wall of the body between the chest and the abdomen, and a weakness of the abdominal wall, which permitted the heart to slip down under the breast bone and outside of the body.

SAVED BY LIFE BOATS

NEW YORK, N.Y., DEC. 28.—The four masted schooner Randall was driven on the rocks near Rhode Island early this morning and sank partly. The crew of ten took refuge in the cross trees and could be seen from shore waving frantically for help Several lifeboat crews tried to make the wreck and rescue the sailors and finally saved all with splendid heroism.

THE MAIN POINT IN THE POWER BY-LAW OF JAN. 1st

Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission, will speak in the Opera House to-night. His subject, as announced, by hand bills, is as follows:

"HON. MR. BECK WILL EXPLAIN VERY FULLY THE POSITION OF THE HYDRO-ELECTRIC COMMISSION OF ONTARIO: WHAT IT HAS ACCOMPLISHED AND WHAT IT CAN DO FOR PETERBOROUGH."

That is just what we don't need to hear about at the present time.

The real point raised by the bylaw is not what the Hydro-Electric can do for Peterborough.

The point is, will the city be allowed to pronounce upon any scheme of expenditure—any power proposal—based on an affirmative answer to the question of the bylaw?

Will Mr. Beck tell the people what they want to know?

The people know that the Hydro-Electric scheme has been a benefit to other parts of the province.

The question of getting power through the Hydro-Electric is not an issue at all.

Mr. Beck may and will doubtless tell a good smooth story, as he is capable of doing.

But will he talk business?

Will he do what the city council has not done in the bylaw—submit some concrete proposal ,giving some idea of the expense involved—tell the ratepayers what they will have to pay, and give them a chance of saying whether or not they are willing to pay it? Will he—AND THIS IS THE MAIN POINT—will he assure the ratepayers who have to foot the bill, that any contract based on the bylaw, if the bylaw be passed, will be submitted to the ratepayers for appoval?

Will he assure us that by voting "Yes" on the bylaw, we shall not place ourselves at the mercy of a council—give them authority to make any contract they choose; incur any expenditure they choose, without asking the leave of the people who have to pay?

The only objection to passing the bylaw is the dangerous power it gives a city council to pledge the people to any amount of expenditure without asking their consent.

If the bylaw is passed this can be done. The Hydro-Electric law, if the bylaw is passed, permits the city council to make any contract involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF THE PEOPLE!

Is that a wise thing to do? Is that good business?

Any council is reckless enough, even with the check of the people's votes on money bylaws. Will it be wise to give the city council unlimited power in regard to contracting for power?

Any girl would say "Yes" to the abstract question, "Do you want to get married?"

But she would hesitate if she were forced to accept any husband that might be selected, without a chance to approve or refuse.

Electors, do you see the point?

THURSDAY, DEC. 28, 1911

HON. MR. BECK AND THE HYDRO-ELECTRIC COMMISSION.

Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission, is announced to speak in the Opera House to-night. It is announced that "he will explain very fully the position of the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario."

This seems to be unnecessary for the Hydro-Electric Commission is practically, a thing of the past.

Sir James Whitney has assured us that the Commission will be abolished, and its functions merged into a department of the Government—taken into politics, and be made a part of the political machine.

Under Mr. Beck, the Commission has been developed, and under him it has done the large amount of good work it has done.

It has done this against the passive opposition and dead weight of the Whitney Government, which lent only obstructive encouragement to it till it was made a success by Mr. Beck.

Now, it is to be taken out of the hands of its creator, out of the controlling influence of a man in sympathy with it.

It is to be made a department of a government that has had nothing but toleration for the Hydro-Electric Commission and its work.

We have no reason to believe that the Hydro-Electric Commission will be the same, under a Government Department that it is now.

And we are proposing to do business with a dying commission—to deal with its policy in its transition stage.

The Hydro-Electric Commission, without Mr. Beck and his influence paramount, will be like the play of Hamlet, with Hamlet left out.

HON. MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Yesterday, Dec. 27, was the 88th birthday of Hon. Mackenzie Bowell. He has long held an honoured place in the journalistic and public life of the country. He has been seventy-seven years a journalist, having been directly and personally connected with the Belleville Intelligencer from boyhood, till 1867, when he left the pleasant and honest paths of journalism for politics, though still retaining his newspaper connection as a wholesome corrective. He began as a boy in the newspaper office and worked his way up. He married the editor's daughter and soon after became proprietor. He has filled many public positions of trust—the portfolios of Minister of Customs, Trade and Commerce, and became Prime Minister in 1895. He held that position till he was literally cuckooed out of it in 1896 by the political emeute, which he fittingly characterized as the "nest of traitors." He was elevated to the Senate in 1892. At his advanced age his mind is still clear and alert, and he is still able, on occasion ,to give forcible expression to his opinion of the "traitors," some still in politics, who practically drove him out of active political life in 1896. He is still in good health and carries his 88 years, jauntily enough to give promise of many more years of life, which his many friends hope he may attain.

DETECTION CERTAIN.

There seems to be no force in example to operate as a detterent of crime and wrong-doing. Two young men employed as clerks in the C.P.R. offices, Toronto, have pleaded guilty to having forged documents to defraud the company, for their own benefit. It is inconceivable that so many young men will go astray under the delusion that they will escape detection. They have daily and hourly examples that sin finds out the perpetrators. There is only one safe way, and that is the honest way. When once a young man departs from the straight path of honest dealing, even in a small way, he has entered upon the downward way. This is an age of rush and hurry, an age of pleasure seeking, an age when the "accursed thirst of gold" arouses in turn the thirst for gratification; and the lax moral training that handicaps our youths, tends to thrust them, under the impulse of temptation, into criminal wrong doing, to satisfy their greed of pleasure, or the mere possession of money. These conditions arise to no small degree from the general acceptance of the plausibly sounding, but essentially vicious, phrase, "honesty is the best policy." "Honesty" as a "policy" and nothing more, is something that lures many to their downfall. Honesty as a principle, is the only safe thing; that influences men to do right because it is right; the other, to be honest because "it pays"—in a material sense.

THE VOICE OF THE WEST.

The Dominion Government seems to be afraid of Western opinion for, in deference to it, the Government is hastening to carry out some of Mr. Borden's pre-election promises, and the policy of the late Government. An Ottawa despatch to the London Advertiser is to this effect:

The Hudson Bay Railway is to be started at once. The Government announced some time ago that there would be no work done until it had time to make a thorough investigation. The result of the announcement was that the Government heard from the West. Thousands of letters were poured in upon all of the ministers, but especially upon the Prime Minister reminding him of pre-election promises, and insisting that the West had already waited too long for this road. Then the various cities of the West began launching campaigns to be made the starting point for the road. Saskatoon and Regina both have well developed campaigns under way for this object. Now the government has changed its min It decided that delay is impracticable, and that the only way to keep out of hot water is to go ahead with the work. Therefore, Mr. J. D. McArthur was awarded the contract by the late Government, has been instructed to make a beginning with the work as soon as possible. He is to start the road at the Pas and push it through to Split Lake, a distance of 185 miles. While that section is being built the surveyors will have time to decide whether Churchill or Nelson is the more desirable harbour, and what is the best route to reach the water terminus when it is decided upon.

When the Borden Government took office everything of the kind was "held up," creating the impression, or endeavouring to do so, that there was something crooked in anything done by the late Government. But investigation and consideration, under the responsibility of office, has convinced the Borden Government that they could not do better than follow the lead, and carry out the plans of the Liberal Government. If the present Government will only do half as well in public administration, as the late Government, the country will forgive them for holding office.

CANADIAN POLITICS IN 1912.

The coming year is to be loud with events in the political world. A presidential election that comes regularly with leap year in the United States; in the very first month the election to the German Reichstag, fraught with strange possibilities; the Home Rule bill in Great Britain—these will make things lively in those countries. Canada also bids fair to furnish some excitement.

How much longer can the new Government at Ottawa postpone the inevitable battle over the navy question? Already things are getting interesting, when the gladiator of Nationalist newspaperdom begins to attack a cabinet minister. Col. Hughes says that Mr. Monk now sees eye to eye with him, which is merely laughable, or makes one or the other of them contemptible. But, however, it may be with Messrs. Hughes and Monk, Nationalism is bound very shortly to sour the Conservative cream. Nemesis is on the track of those who played fast and loose in September.

Nationalism and Jingoism must one of them swallow the other, and either contingency is going to make trouble. Every month that passes increases Mr. Borden's difficulties; but in office he must do something. There is an element in his party, particularly of Ontario, Toronto and Montreal, which will demand some save-the-empire action at once; they will consider in January that the period for playing with the subject of defence is over. "One fleet," says the Ontario school reader! "Hurry up with it, Rule Britannia!" cried the election audiences as they waved their penny flags with patriotic tears streaming down their faces, "Veto!" says Mr. Bourassa.

Or may we assume that these Ontario jingoes did not really want to help Great Britain at all, that all they wanted was office and a continuance of hold-up prices under unrestricted protection? Was it, after all, only pocket imperialism that fed the columns of the Toronto News and the Montreal Star? Do they care a cent for Britain? Mr. Bourassa, at any rate, crows over the bursting of the jingo paper-bag, and gives Mr. Borden credit for estimating at its real valuation the over-rated imperial sentiment of the "English provinces." If Mr. Bourassa is right about this, the jingoes of this country will hardly be able to look their British Unionist confrers in the face.—London Advertiser.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Don't let the Christmas spirit die with the day.

Under the ward system of electing aldermen, eight-tenths of the electors are not represented. Each elector can only vote for two out of ten members.

The Hamilton Herald records the "remarkable" feat of a man who walked a distance of five miles to the Herald office in one hour and two minutes. The chiefly remarkable thing about it is that it was done by a Hamilton man.

Will the average elector mark his ballot on Jan. 1st with the view of electing the best man for the position of alderman—to select the man who will be best able to manage his civic business well? Or, will he be influenced by some personal motive, some party feeling, some fad, losing sight of the main point—to get the best man?

The Mail and Empire proposes to remedy street car congestion by having persons walk who live within two miles of the City Hall. That's about as brilliant as the plan proposed by Hon. Mr. Duff, Minister of Agriculture, to increase the accommodation for students at the Agricultural College by "boosting up the fees," and excluding some pupils to make room for others.

A Presentation

At the closing concert held in School No. 7, Douro, on Friday evening, Dec. 22, the pupils presented their teacher, Mr. J. Garvey, with a handsome silver manicure set, accompanied by the following address:

Mr. J. Garvey—

Dear Teacher,—Assembled here this evening, we think it a fitting time to express to you the sentiments that fill our hearts.

Though you have been with us only one short term, we feel that you have well merited the deepest gratitude of parents and pupils. Your hours in school have been unselfishly and patiently spent with us and results show that your work has not been in vain. Nor have you neglected the social side. We appreciate very much your kindness in preparing this splendid entertainment for us and our parents, and we hope that we may celebrate many future school closings together.

Please accept this little gift from your pupils, who all join in wishing you a happy Christmas and a bright New Year.

Signed—

NEWEST NOTES OF SCIENCE

In connection with the underground railroads which are being built in Buenos Ayres it is proposed to install a pneumatic tube service for correspondence.

A simple faucet which can be locked to prevent the misuse of the contents of a barrel to which it is fastened has been devised by a Pennsylvania inventor.

For testing the dangers of mine gases a delicate machine has been invented in England which photographically measures the duration of the flash of an explosion.

A smoke mask invented by a New York fireman is supplied with fresh air drawn through a small hose by the rush of water through the main hose, to which it is attached.

According to recent census figures New Hampshire has the highest annual death-rate among the states, 17.3 per thousand population, and Washington the lowest, 10 per thousand.

Photographs of the planet Mars taken through colour screens by an eminent Russian astronomer recently showed that its "canals" were filled with some substance sea green in colour.

A patent has been granted a Virginian for a trunk in which the tray is mounted on rollers to slide out at one end, to enable a person to reach the bottom without lifting the tray.

Britain's wheat crop of 1911, amounting to 7,832,186 quarters of 480 pounds each, was the largest since 1899, exceeding by nearly 1,000,000 quarters the crop of the previous year.

Apparatus which, when fastened to a man's feet as he lies in bed, makes his legs go through all the motions of walking, has been invented for the benefit of victims of partial paralysis.

To lessen the smoke and gas in tunnels Swiss railroads are equipping their locomotive stacks with lids, which are closed when a tunnel is entered, the steam being exhausted beneath the engines.

All of the executive departments, the capitol and the congressional office buildings at Washington, will be linked by a new form of pneumatic tubes for carrying mails, messages and small parcels.

The diseases to which caisson workers are especially subject, according to a recent French authority, are due to the fact that when air is compressed hydraulically it loses nearly one-fifth of its oxygen.

CANADA'S AUTHORESSES.

Lethbridge Women Get Together to Improve Their City.

There is not a town or city in Canada that does not boast of some sort of woman's club. In some cities of the Dominion women's organizations outnumber the clubs and associations where the sterner sex reign supreme. But to Lethbridge, Alberta, is given the credit for the first Woman's Civic Club in Canada. This club, "The Woman's Civic Club of the Lethbridge Board of Trade," held its initial meeting, with a charter membership of one hundred and forty names, and since that time scores of new names have been added. Every member of the club is a booster for Lethbridge, and the members of the club, which is an auxiliary to the Board of Trade, are working with their husbands, brothers, fathers and sweethearts in making a greater and better city.

The Lethbridge Board of Trade secured twenty-five thousand dollars to be used for publicity purposes for the year beginning May 1st, 1911, and a portion of this amount was given the new club to use as they deem to the best advantage.

Lethbridge is endeavoring to secure for 1912 the International Dry Farming Congress, which is the largest agricultural organization in the world. As this would mean thousands of visitors to the city, and the hotels could not begin to accommodate the crowds of delegates and visitors, the women of the club will, if the congress convenes in Lethbridge, open their homes to the visitors and persuade as many of their friends as possible to do likewise.

The day the initial meeting of the club was held, a petition was circulated and signed by 200 prominent merchants and business men of the city, asking the mayor to grant a half holiday, and those who signed the petition further agreed, if necessary, to go home and care for the children, so that their wives might attend the meeting. So great an interest was taken by the members of the Board of Trade that the officers and a number of the members of that organization showed their approval by attending the meeting.

The first thing the club decided to do after its organization was to wage a "Buy at Home" campaign. Each member pledged herself to buy her wearing apparel and family needs from the merchants of the city, who in turn promised to secure for the women of the city the smallest and cheapest article at the lowest possible price, and as quickly as possible, if they did not have in stock what was required.

The officers of the club are all representative women of the city, who are energetic and keen workers, alive to every opportunity given to help make a greater, larger and better city. The club's motto is, "Make Lethbridge a Spotless City." Several committees each under the supervision of a member of the executive committee carry on the various branches of the work of the club, which are Publicity, Buy at Home, Information, Moral Reform, City Beautiful, Welcome, Entertainment, Amusement, Finance, Departmental, Membership and Charity. These phases of the work are being carried out along broad lines, and each committee is composed of several eager workers.

One of the principal aims of the club is a hearty greeting to every woman who comes to the city to reside. Realizing that women coming to a new city find it difficult to make acquaintances readily, and soon become discontented with their surroundings unless they make congenial friends, the club observes a "Strangers' Day" each month, when all newcomers are invited to come and have a cup of tea and become acquainted with the members.

Mr. Borden Kissed Her.

On her own admission, Miss Adrienne Beaudet, of 535 St. Patrick street, Ottawa, is the proudest girl in Canada since she was kissed on the cheek by Mr. R. L. Borden, the new Prime Minister of Canada, after she presented him with a bouquet of flowers on the night of the recent demonstration of welcome given him by the people of Ottawa.

The procession was passing Miss Beaudet's home when she stepped out to the side of the carriage in which Mr. Borden was riding and speaking in French, said: "I feel greatly honored to present to the new Prime Minister of Canada this bouquet of flowers. Will you please accept it with my best wishes?"

It was impossible for Mr. Borden to make himself heard above the volley of cheering which the incident occasioned, so he did something more gallant when he leaned over and kissed her.

It was a pretty, chivalrous act, that immensely pleased the thousands who saw it.

Miss Beaudet is a young French-Canadian lady, 18 years of age. Her father is Mr. D. L. Beaudet, a contractor.

Sir Wilfrid as Historian.

London Daily Chronicle: Literature may be the gainer by the surprising result of the Canadian general election. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been Prime Minister for such a long time—a decade and a half—that many of us have forgotten that he was leader of the Opposition for nine years. Sir Wilfrid devoted his leisure to writing a History of Canada, and the work was well advanced when he was called to power. Some years ago Sir Wilfrid stated that he had not been able to add a line since he became Prime Minister, that the manuscript was locked up in a cupboard, and that he reserved its completion for the "occupation of his old age." Some enterprising publisher might possibly persuade Sir Wilfrid to finish it now.

The Sagacious Wolf.

In the school of woodcraft and knowledge of how to keep out of danger wolves have no four-footed equals. The fox is a dunce in comparison, the coyote, or prairie wolf, a fool, and the rest nowhere. The giant moose, king of the Canadian woods, is the most difficult of all the deer species to stalk in the fall months, but nevertheless it is often stalked successfully and shot by amateurs. Not so the wolf.—Wide World Magazine.

A Sweet.

I really thought that I'd fall dead,
The end of all things seemed so near.
I know I staggered when she said
Her last year's hat would do this year.

Wm. Langford Jr.

For North Ward Alderman

To The Ratepayers—

I am in favour of The Hydro Electric bylaw, but if elected will support only such a proposition as will give the city the lowest possible rates for power & light.

The city's interest will be looked after to the best of my ability and its affairs managed as economically as possible consistent with the progress of the city. 5d-148

Yours Respectfully,

Wm. Langford Jr.

Card From

Ex-Alderman Gillespie

Centre Ward

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough.

Ladies and Gentlemen—

Having been again urged by a large number of ratepayers interested in the welfare of the city, I have consented to accept the nomination for Alderman for 1912.

My previous record in the Council is known to you all. If again honoured with your confidence I will endeavour to render such efficient service as will conduce to the best interests of the city irrespective of wards or boundaries.

As my business engagements will not permit me to personally interview the Electors, I take this means of soliciting your votes and influence.

Yours respectfully,

Geo. A. Gillespie

Dec. 24, 1911.

MORROW

For Centre Ward

For the first time I present myself as a Candidate for election to the Council of the city.

I hope to receive a fair measure of support such as is freely accorded a new man, and new candidate.

If elected I will serve the city just as faithfully and as well as I can, never forgetting what is best for it and its people.

Time will not permit of a personal canvass, but I ask for support.

Yours Respectfully,

5d-148 Ladies & Gentlemen.

W. G. MORROW

VOTE TO RE-ELECT JOS. R. METHERAL in CENTRE WARD

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

I have been entrusted with your confidence for the past three years and my record stands open before you. It may show no extraordinary ability, but an endeavour to be straight-forward and honest in all dealing. I have not been swayed by cliques or outside influences, but voted and worked at all times in the interests of the ratepayers in general and will continue to do so in the future, if re-elected. I would advise the electors to vote for the Hydro-Electric Commission Power By-law. I firmly believe that the Hydro-Electric Commission will give Peterborough power at rates considerably reduced from those at present in force, but I pledge myself that no contract for power either with the Hydro-Electric Commission or private corporation shall be signed by the City Council without a By-law to that effect being submitted to the ratepayers.

Wishing you all the Compliments of the Season.

JOS. R. METHERAL

G. N. GORDON

FOR ALDERMAN

CENTRE WARD

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CENTRE WARD.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

As a candidate for Alderman for one of the two seats in the Centre Ward I respectfully solicit your votes.

My platform is briefly this:

1. Obtain Hydro-Electric estimates and reports as to prices, terms, etc., of obtaining power for the city's manufacturers, and for house and store lighting.

2. Abate the nuisance caused by the G. T.R. using Bethune St. as a shunting yard, which injuriously affects hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of realty.

3. Obtain legislation allowing reduction of taxes on businesses and improvements and increasing taxation of land values, thus making the holders of vacant land pay their share of taxes.

4. Have every milk-vendor's milk inspected at least fortnightly and a report with the milkman's name published, showing the proportions of butter fat contained in each lot.

5. Consideration of the question of permanent improvement of highways.

6. Begin an aggressive campaign to obtain new industries and inaugurate a strong publicity scheme.

There are two Aldermen to be elected for the Centre Ward. G. A. Gillespie is contesting one seat with J. R. Metheral, and W. G. Morrow, of Charlotte St., is contesting the other seat with me.

If elected, I will energetically support a progressive campaign for the city's advancement.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I am, yours faithfully,

G. N. GORDON.

Dec. 26, 1911.

VOTE FOR

EX-ALDERMAN J. J. DUFFUS

IN THE WEST WARD

To the Ratepayers of the West Ward and Peterbrough Citizens in general:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—Having the honour of being duly nominated and urged b ya large number of representative citizens to be a candidate in the West Ward, I have decided to again enter the Aldermanic field. At it will be impossible for me to interview each voter, I hereby most respectfully solicit your support and influence to assure my election.

If you so honour me I will pledge myself to do my utmost to assist in executing the city's business in a prudent and business like manner.

New industries, to my mind, is the one essential toward the future growth and success of our city, and I am in favour of a vigorous campaign to obtain cheap power and light, and also to induce the Radial Railway Co. to make extensive extensions. I would like to see the centre of our city with a permanent roadway.

I am opposed to the policy of increasing a man's taxes every time he makes improvements and minor extensions, and would support a measure to eliminate this condition of affairs.

Wishing all a bright and prosperous New Year.

Yours very respectfully,

JOS. J. DUFFUS

4d-149.

Your Vote and Influence is solicited in favour of

Ald. Edgar

for the West Ward

In support of the Hydro-Electric Commission By-law and the efficient and economical management of the city's affairs.

Wishing you all the compliments of the season. 5d-148

Johnston

Wishing the electors a Happy New Year. 5d-148

I Remain Yours Respectfully

W. J. JOHNSTON

To the Ratepayers of No. 1 Ward:

For the first time, I present myself as a candidate for election to Council of this city. I hope to receive your kind support and I shall try and make my services your gain. Equal rights to all and favours to none.

HURTUBISE AND McDONOUGH COULD NOT GET A FALL.

Wrestled For Twenty-eight Minutes at the T.A.S. Smoker Last Night —A Good Programme.

A BOXING EXHIBITION

A very successful entertainment was given in the St. Alphonsus' Lyceum last evening, under the auspices of the T. A. S. Athletic Society. There was a good attendance, and the receipts were very satisfactory. The proceeds are for the benefit of the T. A. S. Hockey Club.

The concert commenced with an exhibition of mat work by the leaders of the gymnasium class. In this they distinguished themselves, in consideration of the short training they have received. The feature of the programme, however, was a wrestling bout between Eugene Hurtubise and Jack McDonough, neither of whom need introduction, both being well known in Peterborough. For the space of 28 minutes they wrestled and neither obtained a fall. The bout was a good one, and though both tried numerous holds, none of them met with success. Another feature of the entertainment was a boxing exhibition of three two-minute rounds by George Lilley and John Guerin. As amateurs, both showed good form, and throughout the bout considerable speed and agility were displayed. The bouts were interspersed with musical items, which rendered the programme an attractive one. Messrs. E. Bartley, George Lynch, E. Hanrahan, and J. Cairns all rendered commendable vocal selections. Master E. Condon contributed a piano solo, and Mr. Dave Quinlan, a stepdance, while Mr. E. Desantel was responsible for a recitation from the works of Dr. Drummond. Mr. J. Dickinson was an able accompanist.

The members of the Hockey Club wish to thank those who organized the concert and also the artists who kindly assisted in the enjoyment of the evening.

NEW RULES ADOPTED FOR PROFESSIONAL HOCKEYISTS

QUEBEC, DEC. 27.—The opening game of the N.H.A., will take place as scheduled in Quebec, on Friday evening, when Wanderers and the locals will clash. It is the intention when games are played in any town that the referee shall be an outside man and the judge of play a local man. President Emmett Quinn has been fortunate in securing a good board of officials for Quebec, the nominees being as follows: H. E. Scott, E. Garneau, Chas. Powers, Geo. McCarron, S. P. Murphy, D. Power, Chas McNamara, J. Dennias, J. Gillespie, W. J. Lynch, Jos. Power, Nap. Belleau, and Dr. Leclerc. From this list referees, umpires, timekeepers, etc., will be chosen in Quebec.

Adventure of Mr. Quinn's visit to Quebec was the making public for the first time of the amended rules governing the matches of the N.H.A. for the coming season.

Six a Side, Nine in Uniform.

In regard to composition of teams the rule reads that at the beginning of each match clubs shall have at least nine players in uniform. Should major fouls or accidents occur after all the above players have participated, the opposing club must drop one of six players, and each player shall bear a number on his left arm. The home club shall have the privilege of choosing the goals to defend at the beginning of a game. Three periods of twenty minutes, with an intermission of ten minutes between, will be the time allowed for matches.

In case of a tie, play shall continue until one side shall have scored a game unless otherwise agreed upon before the match. Any extra time played shall be considered part of the match.

Change Players Any Time.

Each team shall be composed of their players to equalize.

Players may be changed at any time by captains, and substitutes shall be played on the ice and the original player removed without interruption, it being understood, however, that a player once removed cannot return to the ice.

In the event of a player being injured he may retire for ten minutes, but play must continue without teams leaving the ice, the opposing team dropping a man. A goalkeeper will be allowed ten minutes to recuperate, however. If at the end of ten minutes a player cannot return a substitute can be put on and the injured player cannot re-enter the game.

In case of infringement of rules the captain of the team not at fault may claim that the puck be taken back and placed where it was played from.

Major and Minor Fouls.

The rule governing off-side play remains practically as it was.

Major fouls are described as any fouls which physically injures or incapacitates an opposing player; throwing sticks ,which might prevent scoring a game; cross-checking, striking an opponent, deliberate tripping, charging from behind, kicking, collaring or hooking, striking or using foul language to an official in any place or at any time, any player penalized for a major foul shall be banished from the game and replaced by a substitute.

The banished player shall carry a fine of $5 for the first offence, increasing $5 each subsequent offence until a maximum of $25 shall have been reached. Any fine levied must be paid by the player.

Minor fouls are described as kicking, holding ,throwing or batting the puck, raising the stick above the shoulder except in hitting the puck, and deliberately loafing off-side.

For violation of above a warning and then a fine of $5 is to be imposed Any club paying the fine of its player shall be fined $200.

The facing of the puck, rules regarding the goalkeeper, dimensions of puck and stick, scoring of goals, etc., remain as usual.

The president of the association shall appoint a referee and assistant, a time keeper, penalty recorder, two umpires (one behind each goal, which position shall not be changed during a match), and will be paid such compensation as decided upon by the association. The duties of the referee, umpires, penalty recorder, and timekeepers are set forth at length. All disputes shall be decided by the referee and his decision shall be final.

Many Famous Sporting Personages Have Died During Present Year

NEW YORK, DEC. 27.—Many prominent figures in the world of sport and athletics have been removed by death during the year now drawing to a close. In the baseball world the National League in particular was a heavy sufferer, having lost Stanley Robinson, owner of the St. Louis club; William Hepburn Russell, president and chief owner of the Boston club, and Frank S. Elliott, vice-president of the Philadelphia Club.

The active players who passed away during the year included "Addie" Joss, the well-known pitcher of the Cleveland Americans; George M. ("Lefty") Craig, pitcher of the Indianapolis club of the American Association; Napoleon ("Pop") Lenard, pitcher of the Columbus American Association team; Michael Smalling, first baseman of the Lancaster Tri-State club; Simon Nicholls, short-stop and captain of the Baltimore Eastern League club; Herman Priepke, second baseman of the Utica team, of the New York State League; Arthur Brown, first baseman of the Albany team of the New York State League; Harry Hammond, who had played with various teams of the Southern League and American Association, and Everett Lockwood of the Mouse Jaw team.

"Button" Briggs in the List.

In addition to the active players, many former stars of the diamond, and others who had figured prominently in the national game in days gone by, passed away during the year. Among these were Robert Carruthers, famous as a pitcher for the St. Louis Browns in the 80s and later an umpire in the American and minor leagues; William ("Dad") Clarke, at one time a star pitcher of the New York Nationals; "Jack" Rowe, who was one of the 1888 "big-four" of the Detroit team; John Y. Radcliffe, who played with the old Athletics of Philadelphia; Charles Brown, at one time a player on the Brotherhood team of Boston, and later with the Lynn team of the New England League; Bert ("Button") Briggs, formerly pitcher for Toronto, and the Chicago Cubs; Marshal Ney King, a famous hitter and outfielder in the early days of the National League; Arthur Clarkson, who had played with New York, St. Louis, Baltimore, Milwaukee, and other clubs; Dr. John Draper, who organized the famous Red Stockings in Cincinnati in the '60s; Carlos Smith, who was known as the founder of organized baseball in Connecticut; S. Vigneaux, an old-time Pacific Coast player, and Herman H. Vonderhorst who was secretary of the Baltimore club when it was three times pennant winner of the National League.

No Ring Fatalities.

There were no ring fatalities among professional pugilists during the year, neither were any deaths recorded among fighters of prominence. Louis Long, of Oakland, Cal., was the only fighter of any note to die. Several old-timers passed away, among them Charlie McKeever, at one time one of the best of Philadelphia's lightweights, and "Hank" Griffin, the well-known coloured heavyweight.

Well known to followers of pugilism were Malachai Hogan, the Chicago referee and sporting writer; Eddie Smith, the San Francisco referee; Emil ("Pop") Coulon, father and manager of Bantamweight Champion Johnny Coulon; John H. Quack, of Brooklyn, who was John L. Sullivan's backer, and Wm. A. Pearce, of Boston, who had managed Jack Johnson, Joe Walcott, Geo. Dixon, Marvin Hart, and other noted fighters.

Losses in Turf World.

The losses of the year in the turf world included August Uihlein, of Milwaukee, owner of The Harvester and other famous trotters; David C. Johnson, who achieved his widest prominence as the owner of Roseben, Otis Bort, of Flushing, N. Y., who drove the famous Flora Temple in the early '70s; W. S. O'Brien, of Waukegan, Ill., a well-known trainer of trotting horses; Martin V. Walts, of Columbus, O., for many years a grand circuit judge; Alta P. MacDonald, a well-known horseman of Albany, N.Y.; Fred Clarke, of Providence, well-known as a trainer on Grand Circuit tracks; Myron E. McHenry, of Geneseo, Ill., a veteran turfman and famous driver; David M. Rinaldo, of Saratoga, a famous breeder and owner, and E. B. Abercrombie, of Chicago, turf editor and one of America's authorities on the harness horse.

Automobile Victims.

Automobile racing claimed a toll of nearly a dozen deaths during the year 1911. The noted racers killed included Ned Crane, killed at Kansas City, April 14; Marcel Basle, killed at Chicago, June 11; Louis Strang, killed at La Crosse, July 20; Ralph H. Ireland, killed at Elgin, Ill., Aug. 21; Dave Buck, killed at Elgin, Aug. 26; "Billy" Pearce, killed at Sioux City, Oct. 19; Jay D. McNay, killed at Savannah, Nov. 20; Walter Dennelly, killed at Milwaukee June 22, and Robert W. Bean, killed at Denver, May 27.

Several famous trapshooters and wing shots were included among the dead of the year, among them being C. A. Bogardus, for years the world's champion rifle shot of the United States, and John Carker of Detroit, and William Hayes of Newark, both of whom had national reputations as marksmen.

Other Celebrities.

Notable figures in other branches of sport claimed by death during the year were Captain Charles Barr, one of the world's most famous yacht masters; John Graham, for a number of years the trainer in charge of the Harvard University track and field teams; Paddy Kelly, one of Montreal Shamrocks best-known lacrosse players; W. Fred Allen of Utica, long identified with curling in the United States and Canada; Wm. Rotch Wister of Philadelphia, known as the "father of American cricket," Merritt Giffen former national champion discus thrower; Alfred Lequesne, a member of the Cleveland bowling team which broke the world's record at the Buffalo international tournament last year; Jack Smith, a lacrosse and hockey player of Ottawa; William H. Catton of Chicago, who for nearly thirty years had been a prominent figure in the billiard world; Dr. John Hinkey of Philadelphia, formerly national squash racquet champion; Francis Gordon Brown, at one time a celebrated football player at Yale, and Arne Lerum, a former star football player of the University of Wisconsin and all-Western and all-American guard.

Cold Weather Appreciated

Hockeyists sniffed the frost in last night's gale with keen delight and awakened to greet the clear cold of this morning with unmitigated joy, because there is at last a prospect of them getting out on the steel blades for practice. At Brock Street Rink the work of covering the Boiler skating floor was commenced, as soon as the change in the weather came, and this morning the surface was ready to be flooded. The water will be turned on to-day and if the cold continues there will be skating by New Year's Day. Just in time, too, as both intermediate and juniors have O. H. A. games here next week. Fortunately the squad has been working out at the Y.M.C.A. for three weeks, and, physically, the men are in good shape. They will turn out again to-morrow night, at the Y. M. C. A., and likely, by Monday will be able to get out at Brock Street Rink.

CURLING

If the present cold snap stays with us a few days longer, the 'knights of the broom' will be able to get in some of their fine work before this week passes out. Mr. Angus McIntosh, caretaker of the Charlotte street curling rink has at last succeeded in securing an option on a thin sheet of ice. With the addition of another layer or two, giving the necessary smooth surface, curling should be well under way by the first of the year.

Big Money's Worth in Eiderdown Quilts

Never have you seen finer quilts—never have you seen lower prices—our word for it.

Truly extremes meet at this store—highest possible quality at least possible cost. Really good Eiderdown Quilts at the prices of the other kinds.

But all Quilts are not true to their appearance. Their filling is not always what it should be. Not so with ours—ours are good all the way through. Good looking on the outside—coverings of Satin or Sateen in a wide variety of artistic colourings and designs. Good wearing. Mighty good feeling.

In short every Quilt in this collection is good—good right through—or they wouldn't be here.

Prices are equally pleasing—medium prices every one.

No Trace Of Missing Man

COBOCONK, DEC. 28.—The mystery surrounding the disappearance of young McTaggart deepens. For over three weeks nothing has been heard of him. The theory that he is working in some other lumber camp is discountenanced by the fact that all his clothes and his wages await him at his last place of appointment.

Burton, one of his companions on the night of his disappearnce, now denies the reported encounter between himself and McTaggart, and claims that they parted as good friends.

A preliminary hearing was held at Fenelon Falls, but owing to the absence of an important witness a postponement was taken.

TO CHECK A COLD

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortread, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"THERE was nothing in the least business-like, official or stenographic about her manner. If her head bulged with facts about the treatment of the deficient classes, no hint of that appeared in her talk at parties. Few of the young men she danced with thought her clever, and this shows how clever she really was. For there are men in this world who will run ten city blocks in any weather to avoid talking to a woman who knows more than they do, and knows it, and shows that she knows that she knows it."

—Henry Snydor Harrison.

I once heard a very clever girl say bitterly, "Men don't want a girl to have any brains. The more of a fool a girl is, the better they like her."

Now this girl is a person who is extremely clever, and extremely and eternally conscious of the fact. She is of the type that Mr. Harrison describes as knowing more than men do, and knowing it, shows that she knows that she knows it.

And from her bitterness, it is very evident that she has had the experience with men, which Mr. Harrison prophesied for the girl of this type.

Nevertheless, I think she was decidedly unjust in her deduction that men never like a clever girl, but prefer a fool. Given a pretty girl with brains, and another equally pretty without, after the same man, and it's the girl with brains who will win out nine times out of ten. It isn't the cleverness that men object to. It's the display of and consciousness of that cleverness that they don't like.

And it isn't just men who object to that—it's everybody.

People who know a great deal, and know it in such a disagreeable manner that they make other people feel uncomfortable and ignorant, are always at a discount.

It isn't the amount of knowledge, but the manner of it, that offends.

One man may know a great deal, and know it in such a humble unobtrusive manner that he never grates on anyone. Another may not know half so much, and yet be so blatant and obtrusive about his little stock of knowledge, that he makes himself distinctly unpopular by it.

I once went to walk with a man who knew a great deal about botany, and rubbed it into me at every step. He spoke of the trees and flowers by their technical Latin names, and seemed duly surprised when I did not recognise them, and he even called the salt hay "sedgus maritimus." I assure you I did not care to repeat that walk.

Maybe it's an unworthy characteristic of human nature to object to having one's ignorance in any direction constantly and forcibly thrust upon one, but it is certainly a universal trait, and anyone who wants to be popular had better take it into account.

Besides, this blatant, self-conscious, always-calling-attention-to-itself variety of knowledge is nothing more nor less than selfishness.

Anyone who continually injects samples of his own superior wisdom into the conversation, thus making it unintelligible and uninteresting to others, is just an educated variety of common pork.

Don't be so bitter because your cleverness is unappreciated by others.

Try appreciating and displaying this wonderful cleverness a little less yourself, and see if other people do not come to have a greater regard for it and you.

CANADIAN LEAGUE TEAM FOR PETERBORO' IS NOW CERTAINTY

Peterborough will be represented by a team in the Canadian Baseball League next season. This was the assurance given the Examiner this afternoon by Abbie Johnston, the former Guelph manager, who will have charge of and play second base for the Peterborough team. Mr. Johnston has been in Peterborough for the past couple of days and has received such assurances of support that he has no doubt whatever of the success of the proposition. He likes the prospects here and is delighted with Riverside park, which he says will be an ideal ball grounds, although he thinks the diamond might be shifted around somewhere to give a deeper left field.

Mr. Johnston will at once have an interview with President Fitzgerald and Secretary Robinson of the Canadian League, to secure a franchise for Peterborough. No difficulty is anticipated, as Ottawa cannot be taken in unless Peterborough comes, and the League is very anxious to get the Capital in line on account of the big gates there. As the teams get a big percentage of the gate receipts while on the road, the presence in the circuit of a big ball town like Ottawa will be invaluable.

By the way, Chaucer Elliott, of Kingston, the St. Thomas' manager, favours Peterborough being taken in. "There is no chance of me bothering with a team in Kingston," he says, "and I don't think Kingston would be a welcome addition to the league for the simple reason that the only grounds are really out of the city, at least too far removed from the centre to make it worth while. I am heartily in favour of Ottawa and Peterborough being included in the circuit, but not Kingston."

Mr. Johnston says he will have no difficulty in securing a strong team for Peterborough. As he has played in the New York State and New England Leagues, as well as the Eastern, he is well acquainted with the managers end, and will be able to pick up some classy material. He will give local players every chance to make good. Pitcher Quinlan and First Baseman M. O'Brien have been recommended to him and they will be given a chance.

ANNUAL MEETING OF SPRINGVILLE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The annual meeting of the Sunday school of the Springfield Presbyterian church was held last night and was a great success. The reports presented of the work done through the year were satisfactory. Not a member of the school has died during the year, while the ledger will balanc on the right side.

The programme consisted of dialogues, recitations, speeches and musical numbers, principally by the children and members of the school.

A written examination has been held with ten questions set by Rev. Dr. Marsh, ten marks being given for each question, 50 per cent. is pass, 60 per cent. second class honours and 70 per cent. first class honours. The highest marks were made by the following: Annie Brown 96 per cent., George Whitfield 95 per cent., Della Bidgood 92 per cent., Nellie Wilkinson 90 per cent. and John Whitfield 80 per cent.

Congratulatory speeches were made by Messrs. Thomas Hunter, Fred Wilson and Albert Sanderson.

An interesting feature was the presentation by Mr. Harry Clarke and Mr. Bert Sanderson on behalf of the session, and managers of the congregation, to Mr. John Marsh, of a well filled purse, expressing Christmas cheer and New Year's greetings.

Bachelors Hold Dance

A very enjoyable dance was held under the auspices of the Bachelors' Club of Peterborough in the Conservatory Music Hall on Tuesday night. Some two hundred people were present and the occasion was a great success. Delightful music was provided by Fralick's orchestra of Toronto. Refreshments were served and the affair broke up at an early hour.

WHERE THE ACORNS GROW

A Short Story

BY CARL JENKINS

(Short Story.)

"Just in time for the acorns, my dear," added Miss Molly Durham to her welcome to her school chum, Miss Cathy Dalton, of the city, as the latter reached the railroad depot at Ravensrest.

"Oh, are these acorns?"

"Pecks and pecks of them—nice acorns—sweet acorns—acorns falling on your head as you kick around in the dead leaves!"

"And I never saw one, except in a picture!"

"And there's a man!"

"You can't mean it!"

"But I do. He's a young man!"

"Better and better!"

"He's a mysterious young man, with black eyes and curly hair."

"Oh, Molly! I'm so glad I came! Go on, quick!"

"I don't know his name. He appeared a week ago in a very mysterious manner."

"How delicious!"

"I was up on the hill after acorns. There's a stream there. I was carrying my hat in my hand and whistling 'Yankee Doodle,' and I had just jumped over a log, and my hair was down, and I know I looked my very worst, when——"

"Yes, when——"

"When I ran right on him—the man—the young man—the mysterious young man."

"As he was gathering acorns"

"No, he wasn't. He was fishing. Yes, he just sat on a log fishing, and I couldn't see that he had caught a thing."

"And you screamed?"

"Not a scream! Cathy Dalton, do you think I'm a child?"

"Well, he raised his cap to you?"

"No, he didn't. I don't believe he even raised his eyes, though he must have heard me. He just sat there like a chump and bobbed his fishline, and he paid no more attention to me than it I were a goose on the other bank."

"And everybody says you are so handsome!"

"Yes."

"He must be so near-sighted that he can't see the end of his nose. And you had to walk off alone?"

"Yes, but I broke down bushes and clubbed trees to show him how I felt about it. Since he was a trespasser on mother's property, he might have had the manners to ask me if farmers didn't feed pigs acorns to fatten them. I looked back four times before the bushes hid him, but he sat there humped up just the same."

"And wasn't looking after you?"

"Not a look. There is surely a mystery about him."

"There surely is, but we'll get to the bottom of it. We'll go after acorns this very afternoon, and we'll see if he ignores both of us. He may be suffering from unrequited love, but he needn't be a cad about it. Just wait till we march up to him!"

Dwight Pelham had graduated as an M.D. at Columbia. His health was not of the best, and he had had a hard time to pull through. Then a friend had said to him:

"Go up the country and find a quiet place to rest. Fish, hunt and loaf. Don't think of hanging out your shingle for weeks yet, and don't fall in love."

And the bearer of the new sheepskin had taken the advice. That is, he had hunted without shooting anything, and he had escaped the snares of Cupid for two whole weeks when discovered sitting on the log among the acorn trees. Oh, yes, he had seen and heard the whistling girl, but Dr. Pelham was shy—very shy. He hoped to remain unnoticed himself, and he flattered himself that he had. He visited the hill a second time, not in the hope of seeing the same girl, but really to catch a fish or two. He enjoyed the chatter of the squirrels, the voices of the bluejays, and the murmur of the stream, and he felt annoyed when the laughter of two girls suddenly reached his ears. He arose to go away, but they were in the path he must take, and he sat down again.

Two minutes later two young ladies appeared on the bank at his left. One whistled and the other sang. Then the whistler sang and the other whistled.

Then they threw sticks into the water!

Then they threw clubs at the chipmunks!

Then one of them asked if tramps were ever seen in the woods.

Then the other replied that they hadn't better be seen there if they knew what was good for them. Then both giggled and kicked up the dead leaves and walked away. Dr. Pelham smiled. He was shy, but he knew that their actions were girl like. Ten minutes had passed, and he was smiling indulgently when a fish took his hook. Then a squirrel who had miscalculated his leaping distance fell short and came plump down on his head. He was in the midst of trouble when he heard a scream and before he could locate it one of the girls came tearing through the bushes and halted before him to exclaim:

"Oh, sir, right out there!"

"Yes. What is it?"

"She—she climbed a tree!"

"Well?"

"I—I told her not to but she would do it."

"Yes, she climbed?"

"And she'd got up I don't know how many hundred feet high when she thought you were coming and—and—"

"Lost her hold and fell?"

"Yes, yes. She's crying and laughing, and I think that she has broken her arm. We gig-giggled at you, but we want you to come."

"Most certainly."

It was Miss Cathy Dalton who was sitting with her back to the oak she had climbed, though there was a bushel of acorns on the ground around her. Yes, it was her right arm that was broken, and that wasn't the worse of it—not with her—not with a good-looking girl. In making her descent she had passed through several scraggly branches, broken down the hazel bushes and hit the ground with a great jolt. Her hair was hanging—her garments torn—face and hands scratched and one pink ear bleeding from a cut. Even her limpid tears were leaving streaks down her cheeks.

"I'll have to run for help, but I won't be gone long," said Dr. Pelham when he had assured himself of the nature of the injury. And then to Miss Molly, who was also weeping in sympathy:

"Wet your handkerchief in the creek and rub it over her face and forehead, and don't get excited over this thing."

In 20 minutes the doctor was back with first aid; and in 30 there was a farmer with his wagon there to convey the patient to the Durham homestead. There was considerable trouble before the broken arm was set and strapped and so it was three or four hours after the accident when Miss Molly had opportunity to say to the girl in bed:

"Think you were awful smart, don't you!"

"What do you mean?"

"To go and climb that tree."

"But you dared me to."

"Yes, but I didn't dare you to fall head over heels and break your arm, and have a doctor, and all tht. I'm sorry if it hurts, but I can see your little game."

"Game? Game?"

"Yes, Miss Innocence, You are going to marry the doctor!"

And a year later when Miss Cathy told Miss Molly that she and Dr. Pelham were engaged, there was a "humph!" followed by the words;

"Of course you are! Don't I know you fell out of that tree on purpose! Well, I don't like doctors, so you can have him!"

A By-law To Beautify The City Streets

A number of bills, advertising a social function to be held in a week or so, were pulled down off the poles on George street, where they had been posted, last night. The act is supposed to be that of some malicious person, as the bills were too securely fastened to be blown away by the wind.

In conversation with Chief Thompson this afternoon, an Examiner reporter was informed that there is no law prohibiting bills from being torn down off the poles, and while he thought that the act was certainly a very mean one, yet it was his opinion that a by-law should be passed prohibiting any bills from being posted on the poles on the street. He drew the reporter's attention to several cities and towns, where such a by-law was in force, and stated that it made the street look much brighter to have the poles painted at the bottoms for ten or twelve feet up instead of being plastered by numerous bills. Such a by-law would include all kinds of signs, barber signs and such like. The Chief thought that there were other places where these could be placed to as good effect, as patching up the poles along the street with them.

A WONDER WORKER

"It heals like magic," is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

Dangerous Sport

A number of small boys have been playing on the ice on the little creek at Aylmer street bridge, this last few days, and the attention of the Police authorities has been drawn to the matter. The ice is very thin and only runs about half way across the creek, which, at this point, has a very swift current. The danger is very great, and parents should be careful to warn their children about the matter. To-day, some dozen or so of boys indulged in the very dangerous sport of skating on the east side of the river, opposite the end of Charlotte street. As yet the ice is very thin and the sport is one of the most dangerous, and if it is continued the police will look into the matter.

Full complement of passengers were on board who had taken advantage of the Christmas holidays for a visit to the old country.

THE WEATHER

After several weeks of mild and spring-like weather, winter has apparently set in once more. Last evening it turned considerably colder with snow and a high wind. The lowest temperature last night was 10 degrees above zero. The cold will likely increase in intensity.

DEATH OF MR. WM. CROFT

One of The Best Known Residents of Peterboro Has Passed Away.

There passed away very suddenly at 10.30 last evening an old and highly respected citizen in the person of Mr. William Croft, of 220 Reid street. The deceased contracted a chill on Saturday last, which developed into pneumonia, to which is attributed the cause of his death.

Mr. Croft, who had reached the advanced age of eighty-eight years, was born in England, coming to Canada with his parents when only six years of age. For a time he settled in Cobourg, but in 1843 came to Peterborough, and for some time drove a team to and from Port Hope. He later was engaged in the hotel business, being proprietor of the Crown Hotel, which occupation was succeeded by the manufacture of soft drinks. In 1850 he married Miss Jane McMann, who survives him. A Presbyterian in religion, he was a valued member of, and a constant attendant at, Knox church. He was a very prominent Conservative. His many estimable qualities had won for him the high esteem of the community and the news of his demise met with universal regret. His death coming so suddenly was a severe shock to the relatives who have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends. In passing, he leaves behind him a memory of sterling manhood and citizenship.

In addition to a sorrowing wife, the ceased gentleman is survived by a son, Mr. W. H. Croft, of Toronto, and a daughter, Mrs. McNeal, matron of the Rockwood hospital, Kingston. One sister also laments his demise, in the person of Mrs. Donaldson of Rochester.

The funeral will take place at 2 o'clock to-morrow to the Little Lake cemetery.

THE CHORUS LADY

Patricia O'Brien, Queen of the Chorus, rolled through a dramatic refinery in James Forbes international comedy, "The Chorus Lady" and will make her appearance at the Grand for two performances on New Year's Day. "The Chorus Lady" has scored one of the greatest hits of the American stage in recent years and she comes to this city with the endorsement of a year's run in New York, nine months in Boston, six months in Chicago, and six months in London, England.

The play is a four act comedy, and contrary to the title, is not a musical show, though a dozen girls are carried for the famous dressing room scene in the second act. It is a story of stage life, with a fetching theme and a serious lesson. It pictures certain phases of life in that mysterious land, "behind the scenes," dealing with the rank and file, rather than upper stardom, which field has been frequently invaded by American authors.

Patricia O'Brien is the commonly accepted type of the chorus girl, so far as her vernacular and her general bearing are concerned, but her honesty of purpose and her wholesome humanity stamp her as a most unusual young person and help make the character one of the most original and at the same time most convincing and appealing that has been brought forward on the stage in many a day.

Judgment Reserved

In the liquor case of Northey and Kennedy, at Lakefield, yesterday, all the evidence was taken in the case, and judgment was reserved for eight days. Magistrate Robinson presided, Mr. Robt Ruddy, K.C., prosecuted, while Mr. James Haverson, K.C., Toronto, conducted the defence.

"VOTER" ARGUES IN FAVOUR OF POWER BY-LAW

By all means let us have cheaper power and light from the Hydro-Electric Commission. A rapidly increasing number of other live municipalities are making use of the Hydro-Electric Commission. They have the Government behind them, who are anxious to give the people light and power at cost. In a word, they will make private power companies disgorge—cough up and hand back power that rightly belongs to the people, and which private power companies have gobbled up. Private companies will expend any amount of money, to do us out of cheap light and power. It will pay them to spend thousands to defeat the Hydro-Electric By-law on January 1st, as they would soon make it up by charging high prices for light and power. These private power companies have a lot of smooth writers and speakers engaged in trying to persuade the people to leave themselves at the tender mercies of the private monopolist. This move for Hydro, cheap light and power is the most important, "industrially," that Peterborough has ever undertaken. Manufacturers will locate where they can have cheap power and light. If Peterborough does not secure cheap power and light, then it will have to give other inducements as well as exemption from taxes. Then, power and light means lower taxes, cheaper living, new industries and plenty of work at better wages.

Every voter who is solicited for a vote by any candidate at the coming election should require a pledge from him to support the Hydro-Electric, the people's scheme for power at cost, and he should not be allowed to evade the question by saying that he will see what it will cost. Let the private corporations and power grabbers get from between the people and their natural rights — there can be no dividends to capitalists, promoters' fees, etc., in the costs of the Hydro-Electric scheme.

VOTER.

ALD. MORGAN ADVOCATES HYDRO-ELECTRIC BY-LAW

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir.—If the ratepayers reject the aid of the Hydro-Electric Commission, they will be throwing away the last chance for municipal power. Even if Hydro-Electric power cost as much as it would to purchase it from the monopoly, it would still be much better to take it through the Commission. In buying it from the Seymour Power Co., the price would be fixed for a time, but who could tell what it would be in years to come? There is no coal in Ontario; electric power is what we depend upon. And as the demand increased the monopoly would raise the price, and they could do as they liked. This consideration should cause a favourable vote on the question on January 1st.

Again, the cities which are taking, or will take, power from the Commission, will in future have cheaper power, for their debenture debt for their distribution plant will be paid off and also the debt contracted for the transmission lines. Then they will be in a position to drop the price of power, but if Peterborough ties itself up with the monopoly, there will be no such situation here. We should get municipal power, and get it as quickly as possible, so as to have the initial expenses paid off at the same time as the other cities, or they will have us at a great disadvantage.

Yours truly,
HARRY MORGAN.

H. H. Burnham Passes Away

Port Hope Citizen Well Known Here is Dead

PORT HOPE, DEC. 27.—Henry Hamilton Burnham, one of Port Hope's most prominent and respected citizens, died of pneumonia this afternoon, after an illness of two days at his home, "Dunbarton Hall." Mr. Burnham who was born in Port Hope, on November 3, 1842, was the last surviving child of the late Mark Burnham and Sophronia Gilchrist, both connected with United Empire Loyalist families of prominence in the old Newcastle district.

The late Hon. Zacheus Burnham and the late Hon. Asa Burnham were brothers of deceased's father, and members of the first Legislative Council when that body sat alternately in Quebec and Ontario. His uncles, Drs. James and John Gilchrist were well-known physicians in this district during that period. They were also pioneers of industry, having built mills and other industries and gravel roads through the counties of Durham, Northumberland and Peterborough in the days when capital was scarce and the need of it to promote such works was badly felt.

Mr. Burnham led a private life but was for several years in succession Mayor of Port Hope, and had been interested in numerous financial institutions. At the time of his death he was Chairman of the Harbour Board of the town and President of the Midland Loan and Savings Company, which had its head office in Port Hope.

Deceased possessed a most amiable and lovable disposition, and his loss will be long felt in the community, where he had friends innumerable. In religion he was an Anglican and for several years was the Rector's warden of St. John's Church.

In addition to his widow, he is survived by one son, Captain James Gilchrist Burnham, of the Royal Canadian Regiment, and the following daughters:: Mrs. Curry, widow of the late E. L. Curry, M.A., of Cambridge; Mrs. McKinley, wife of W. W. McKinley, M. D., of Port Hope; Mrs. Hodgson, wife of P. E. Hodgson, M.I.M.E., of London, England; Mrs. Lowes, wife of F. C. Lowes of Calgary, Alta., and two unmarried, Grace and Hazel, at home.

The funeral will take place on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Gillespie Denies Rumour

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I find that there is a rumour in circulation to the effect that I am the Seymour Power Company's Candidate and that I am "knocking" the by-law now before the people. This is absolutely untrue. Neither the Seymour Company, or any other Company have had anything to do with my being a candidate, nor have I been asked to pledge myself for, or against, the by-law.

I may also say that I have always supported, and will continue to support every sound measure for securing cheap power and cheap light for the City of Peterborough, as well as a lower rate of taxation.

If the people carry this by-law, and I am one of the Aldermen elected to next year's Council, I will do as I have always done, deal with the power question and all other questions, as in my judgment is in the best interests of the city.

Yours truly,
G. A. Gillespie.

Gordon Is Sure Of "Merchant's" Vote

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—If Mr. G. N. Gordon makes as live and energetic an Alderman as he is a candidate, he will be a good one. I believe he will and he will get my vote.

Yours truly,
Merchant.

THIS LETTER IS TOO PERSONAL

The Examiner has received for publication a letter regarding the unsatisfactory work that is being done upon "the sewer in the South End." It seems to be too personal in statement and ammus to warrant publication, though the statements made may have facts for their foundation. If so, "City Ratepayer" should give them the weight of his name.

EXACTLY TO THE POINT

It is a breach of business confidence to say that a gentleman sent a letter to the Examiner, strongly advocating the adoption of the power by-law.

It was palpably an advertisement; and he was willing to pay for it as such.

But he would not definitely order its insertion till he knew what he would be required to pay.

In this he was right. He was acting like a business man.

In taking this position, however, he was advancing the strongest possible argument against the adoption of the power by-law.

In a simple business matter, he was conducting business on business principles.

He could not, consistently with good business practice, trust a newspaper to place an indebtedness of perhaps a hundred cents, without having a clear understanding—without knowing what he was to pay for what he was to get.

He furnished an argument exactly on that point.

In the power by-law, the people are asked to vote "yes" and give the council of this, or some other year, power to saddle a debt of hundreds of thousands of dollars without their consent.

The people are asked to vote yes, without having any statement of what they are to get, or of how much they will have to pay.

The law provides that if the people say they want power from the Hydro-Electric, their 'yes' automatically authorizes the city council to enter into a contract for power and incur a large indebtedness thereby, and without submitting the contract to the people, who have to pay.

Will somebody tell us whether there is any law against allowing the ratepayers to have a voice in the matter of the contract, and the consequent expenditure of their money?

Presentation To Teacher

Miss Clark Was Remembered by Her Pupils

The Elmdale school concert, held on Friday last was a great success. An attendance of about forty were present to see the able manner in which the children took their parts. The teacher, Miss Clark, was presented with a Christmas remembrance of a dainty ring and bar pin, accompanied by the following address:

"Dear Miss Clark,—One year has passed since you came to us as our teacher and friend. We have, indeed, felt you to be the latter—a wise and true friend—kind and considerate, to one and all of us, regardless of our deserts as pupils. In presenting you with this little testimonial, I assure you, on behalf of the whole school, that as a patient teacher, a wise counsellor, and an excellent instructor, you will ever be remembered by the pupils of Elmdale school with feelings of affection. We wish you a very Merry Christmas and look forward, with pleasure, to you presiding in our midst after the holiday season. Signed on behalf of the school—Murton Colon, Della Bidgood.

Candy was then passed and the entertainment was closed with heart iest greetings for the Christmas season.

Fortune Tellers In Town

A couple of female fortune tellers are in the city to-day soliciting business. This morning they visited a number of George street merchants, and for a small remuneration promised to reveal the future of their patrons. Business was not very brisk, however, and to one of their victims, they announced that they would seek other fields for their labours.

They were dark skinned, and were attired in a gipsy costume of coloured silk, with a shawl covering the head.

351,595 IMMIGRANTS

Examiner Special:

OTTAWA, ONT., DEC. 28.—With figures almost complete, the Immigration Department announces a total immigration to Canada this year of 351,595, against 311,084, last year. The immigration to Canada from the States has increased considerably. It is noticeable that the exodus from the United States and Canada to Southern Europe this year was very heavy, presumably on account of the return of the Italians for the Turkish war.

THE C.N.R. IS EXPANDING

Network of Radial Lines Purchased Around Hamilton

TO FEED STEAM RAILWAY

Hamilton, Dec. 29.—That the stock of the Dominion Power & Transmission Co. and its subsidiary companies, will be transferred to Mackenzie and Mann early in 1912, is the gist of a story published yesterday in The Spectator, the owner of which paper is Wm. Southam, who is also a large stockholder in the Dominion Power & Transmission Co.

The holdings of the local concern include the Hamilton Street Railway, the Cataract Power & Light Co., and four radial electric lines; the Brantford & Hamilton, Hamilton & Dundas, Hamilton, Grimsby & Beamsville, and the Hamilton, Burlington & Oakville railways.

The acquisition of these properties by the big Toronto firm is said to be a part of a general scheme, incidental to the expansion of the Canadian Northern Railway, to secure control of a large number of electrical lines as feeders to the steam road, and it is probable that other electric lines in this section of the province will be taken over by the Mackenzie & Mann interests in the near future.

It is expected that the deal now in progress will be concluded before the Canadian Northern plans for entering Hamilton are filed in January, and it is understood that the city's attitude toward certain proposals which the prospective owners of the Hamilton Street Railway are prepared to make to the city in regard to extensions to the street railway system, will have a material bearing on the C.N.R. plans. The Canadian Northern route through the city, it is said, has already been secured and speculation in surrounding property by Toronto capitalists has become active. The charter of the Dominion Power & Transmission Co. gives it the right to an underground entrance to Toronto, and this feature is said to make the investment attractive to the Mackenzie & Mann interests.

C.N.R. Service To Orient.

Toronto, Dec. 29.—A San Francisco message purports to announce that Sir Donald Mann, at present in California, has stated definitely that the C.N.R. proposes to inaugurate in the near future a steamer service between Canada, Australia, and China, as well as a Western Canada grain service to Europe, via Vancouver and the Panama Canal, as soon as that undertaking is completed some three years hence.

Wife's People Knocked Him.

New York, Dec. 29.—Richard Croker, former leader of Tammany Hall, and his sons, Richard Croker, jr., and Howard Croker, were made joint defendants in a civil action begun yesterday by John J. Breen, to recover $100,000. Breen was married to Miss Ethel J. Croker, daughter of the former Tammany leader, on April 29, 1910, and alleges that his wife's affections were alienated by Croker and his two sons. Breen declares, in his complaint, that he and his wife lived peaceably, happily and harmoniously together until the defendants influenced and induced his wife to leave him.

Breen was a teacher of horsemanship when he and Miss Croker were married by a justice of the peace in Hoboken, N.J. It was said at the time that the family of the bride were much displeased at the marriage.

Breen has since his marriage, been horse trainer for James R. Stratton, ex-M.P., of Peterboro, Ont.

Gomez Not a Rebel.

San Antonio, Texas, Dec. 29.—Dr. Emilo Vasquez Gomez, who was Madero's representative in Washington during the late revolution, later Minister of the Interior under De La Bara, and recently candidate for vice-president of Mexico, denied here yesterday that he was connected with any revolutionary movement.

Gomez said the surrender of Gen. Bernardo Reyes and the capture of several of his followers, removes the last possibility of a counter revolution in Mexico.

TUNNEL IS ABANDONED

P. E. I. to Have a Ferry Service With the Mainland

PROPOSED CAR SERVICE

Ottawa, Dec. 29.—The people of Prince Edward will at last have a car ferry service to the mainland. Such was the official announcement last night, and the efforts of the two Conservative members, Messrs. McLean and Nicholson during the last two months are at length crowned with success.

A long felt want of the people of Prince Edward Island has thus at last been satisfied by the present action of the present Government. The island province came into confederation under a distinct promise by the Dominion Government to maintain a connection all the year round between the island and the mainland. The Government of Sir John Macdonald implemented this pledge in good faith, but the Liberals under the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier insisted that a tunnel should be built as the only effective method of carrying out the contract of confederation.

The Government has met the wishes of the baby province by arranging at once for the installation of a car service between the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Intercolonial Railway, and ... this purpose the guage of the P. E. I. Railway will be increased from three feet six inches to four feet eight and a half inches, the standard gauge.

A semi-official announcement given out in the Premier's office says: "The proposal of the Government will involve the change of narrow gauge to standard gauge on the P. E. I. Railway. This improved service will do away with the three short hauls and it is confidently anticipated that it will result in great advantage to the people of the island, and especially to the farmers and other producers."

Pastor Has Alibi.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 29.—A congregation in Quanah, Texas, was hearing Rev. Chas. M. Brewer preach a sermon on "Practical Christianity" at the time of the blowing up of the Government bridge at Fort Riley, Kansas, in which the pastor's name was implicated through a confession of Private Michael Quirk, according to a statement made here yesterday by Rev. Mr. Brewer. The Minister was passing through the city on the way from Olustee, Okla., his home, to Fort Riley, where, he says, he will investigate the conditions leading up to his arrest, and demand an explanation of Government officials.

Rev. Mr. Brewer's arrest followed a confession by Private Quirk, in which he said he had met the pastor, formerly chaplain at the fort, riding in an automobile with a woman, and that they had asked him to join them in blowing up the big bridge over the Kansas River.

Montreal D.R.O. on Trial.

Montreal, Dec. 29.—The trial of Albert Gingras, returning officer for the division of Maisonneuve, at the last federal election, on a charge of attempting to defraud the Dominion Government by falsifying election accounts continued yesterday afternoon before Judge Lanctot.

A number of deputy returning officers were called as witnesses for the prosecution, some of who denied signatures on accounts said to be theirs, while others declared that they had signed the accounts in blank, leaving Dr. Gingras to fill in the figures, and still others, looking over accounts for their polls, pleaded ignorance of charges for transport and police service presented to the Dominion Government.

Suicide In Sunday School.

Woodstock, Dec. 29.—Choosing as his death bed the platform in the Sunday school room of Dundas street Methodist Church, Joseph Rogers, a resident of this city, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by blowing his brains out with a 32-calibre revolver.

The body of the unfortunate man was found by an employe of a local firm, who went to lay some carpet in the Sunday school room. It was lying in a pool of blood, and the man's head was resting on his overcoat, which had been neatly folded before the shooting took place.

Rogers attended prayer meeting in the church the night before and it is thought that he remained in the building all night. The deceased is a married man, but has been living apart from his wife for some time.

Canon Ellegood's Successor.

Montreal, Dec. 29.—At the adjourned vestry meeting of the Church of St. James the Apostle, to choose a successor to the late rector, Canon Ellegood, the Rev. A. P. Shatford received a substantial majority of the votes of the congregation. Canon Sheeve of Sherbrooke was named as the alternative. The two names will now be submitted to the Lord Bishop of Montreal, and his choice announced at a vestry meeting next Thursday.

Before the balloting, it was pointed out that Rev. Almond Abbott of Hamilton, who was among the nominees, would probably not accept the rectorship, even if it were offered to him.

France Cuts Cable Tolls.

New York, Dec. 29.—The French Telegraph Cable Co. announced last night that beginning Jan. 1, it would accept plain language cablegrams to England. France and Germany, at half the rate of code messages, full rate business to take precedence over the reduced rate despatches.

CHINA IS DEFIANT

Attitude to Russia Results in Serious Strain

MONGOLIA IS NOT WANTED

Pekin, Dec. 29.—In response to a direct request of the Russian Government, handed to the Chinese Foreign Office by the Russian charge d'affaires yesterday, that China should promptly resume control of Mongolia, the Chinese Government declared its inability to comply at the present moment. The only action the Government is able to take regarding Mongolia, the independence of which has been proclaimed, is the appointment of two commissioners, who have been ordered to proceed by way of the Trans-Siberian Railway, to Urga, the chief city, to persuade the Mongol authorities, if possible to renew their allegiance to China. But in view of the present crisis it is probable that these commissioners will never leave Pekin.

For several years past the Chinese have been aggravating Russia and have been treating her contumaciously since the Japanese defeated her. China even began to organize modern troops and take other military measures along the Russian frontiers. Russia has often protested against this, and the Chinese Foreign Board has verbally agreed to the Russian demands, but has never fulfilled the promises. As late as October the Foreign Board's written reply evades Russia's demands.

Although the Russians express their desire that Mongolia shall continue as a buffer state, the attitude of the Mongolian princes, who assembled in Pekin yesterday, depends entirely on circumstances. As they are not able to defend themselves, they will probably accept terms from the Pekin Government, whether monarchical or republican.

Princes Plead Poverty.

Pekin, Dec. 29.—The assembly in the palace yesterday to discuss affairs connected with a settlement of the revolution, was productive of at least one dramatic incident. The Dawager Empress, the Premier, Yuan Shi Kai, and the princes of the Imperial clan were present and the debate waxed so warm that finally Yuan Shi Kai arose and offered his resignation. This, however, was refused.

Premier Yuan Shi Kai explained to the princes that he could continue the Government and retain the country north of the Yangtse only by having funds placed at his disposal. He asked the princes to empower him to secure money. He explained that $10,000,000 would meet the payments for the soldiers for five months, after which the south would become disunited and province after province would return to their allegiance to the throne.

But the princes were unmoved. They pleaded lack of money, although most of them are very wealthy. None has given any substantial amount to aid the Government with the exception of Prince Ching, who has handed over more than $100,000 for that purpose. The Dowager Empress wept, and Yuan Shi Kai showed signs of distress. Then he declared that he could not desert her and the child Emperor, and agreed to continue.

It is said that Yuan Shi Kai intends to make another attempt to obtain a loan of $10,000,000 from the "four nation" group, of which three of the countries signified their willingness to furnish a loan three weeks ago, England declining to participate.

Premier Takes Sick Leave.

Paris, Dec. 29.—A Pekin despatch to the Paris edition of The New York Herald, says:

Disgusted at the refusal of the Imperial clan to contribute to the war chest, Yuan Shi Kai last night took sick leave. It is believed that this presages his early retirement from the Premiership. He bitterly resents the bad faith of Wu Ting Fang and his party in proposing a national congress and now insisting upon a rump, not a representative congress. Yuan fears that a republic means the country's dissolution and believes that the only sane solution is to fight it out, but he is handicapped by lack of money.

Triumphant Revolutionaries.

Shanghai, Dec. 29.—An Imperial edict will not be accepted by the revolutionists, except in the most liberal form under which a republic can be established without delay, or unless it provides for the recognition of the provisional government, of which Dr. Sun Yat Sen will be elected president to-day at the regular convention of the Nanking conference.

The revolutionary leaders here laugh at the apparent struggle of Yuan Shi Kai, the Imperial Premier, to temporize with the situation, which, they declare, has completely passed out of his control.

Will Join Revolution For $20.

London, Dec. 29.—A despatch to The Morning Post from Shanghai says that the revolutionary leaders have been informed by Gen. Li Yuen Heng, the revolutionary commander at Wuchang, that 30,000 Imperialist troops at Hankow have offered to join the revolution for $20 apiece.

Russia Bars Out Salvation Army.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 29.—The Council of Ministers has decided not to allow the Salvation Army to carry on its work in Russia.

Gen. William Booth, commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army, went to St. Petersburg in 1909 to negotiate with the Government for permission to establish a branch of the Salvation Army in Russia. He was strongly opposed by the holy synod.

THE C.N.R. IS EXPANDING

Network of Radial Lines Purchased Around Hamilton

TO FEED STEAM RAILWAY

Hamilton, Dec. 29.—That the stock of the Dominion Power & Transmission Co. and its subsidiary companies, will be transferred to Mackenzie and Mann early in 1912, is the gist of a story published yesterday in The Spectator, the owner of which paper is Wm. Southam, who is also a large stockholder in the Dominion Power & Transmission Co.

The holdings of the local concern include the Hamilton Street Railway, the Cataract Power & Light Co., and four radial electric lines; the Brantford & Hamilton, Hamilton & Dundas, Hamilton, Grimsby & Beamsville, and the Hamilton, Burlington & Oakville railways.

The acquisition of these properties by the big Toronto firm is said to be a part of a general scheme, incidental to the expansion of the Canadian Northern Railway, to secure control of a large number of electrical lines as feeders to the steam road, and it is probable that other electric lines in this section of the province will be taken over by the Mackenzie & Mann interests in the near future.

It is expected that the deal now in progress will be concluded before the Canadian Northern plans for entering Hamilton are filed in January, and it is understood that the city's attitude toward certain proposals which the prospective owners of the Hamilton Street Railway are prepared to make to the city in regard to extensions to the street railway system, will have a material bearing on the C.N.R. plans. The Canadian Northern route through the city, it is said, has already been secured and speculation in surrounding property by Toronto capitalists has become active. The charter of the Dominion Power & Transmission Co. gives it the right to an underground entrance to Toronto, and this feature is said to make the investment attractive to the Mackenzie & Mann interests.

C.N.R. Service To Orient.

Toronto, Dec. 29.—A San Francisco message purports to announce that Sir Donald Mann, at present in California, has stated definitely that the C.N.R. proposes to inaugurate in the near future a steamer service between Canada, Australia, and China, as well as a Western Canada grain service to Europe, via Vancouver and the Panama Canal, as soon as that undertaking is completed some three years hence.

Wife's People Knocked Him.

New York, Dec. 29.—Richard Croker, former leader of Tammany Hall, and his sons, Richard Croker, jr., and Howard Croker, were made joint defendants in a civil action begun yesterday by John J. Breen, to recover $100,000. Breen was married to Miss Ethel J. Croker, daughter of the former Tammany leader, on April 26, 1910, and alleges that his wife's affections were alienated by Croker and his two sons. Breen declares, in his complaint, that he and his wife lived peaceably, happily and harmoniously together until the defendants influenced and induced his wife to leave him.

Breen was a teacher of horsemanship when he and Miss Croker were married by a justice of the peace in Hoboken, N.J. It was said at the time that the family of the bride were much displeased at the marriage.

Breen has since his marriage, been horse trainer for James R. Stratton, ex-M.P., of Peterboro, Ont.

Gomez Not a Rebel.

San Antonio, Texas, Dec. 29.—Dr. Emilo Vasques Gomes, who was Madero's representative in Washington during the late revolution, later Minister of the Interior under De La Bara, and recently candidate for vice-president of Mexico, denied here yesterday that he was connected with any revolutionary movement.

Gomez said the surrender of Gen. Bernardo Reyes and the capture of several of his followers, removes the last possibility of a counter revolution in Mexico.

TUNNEL IS ABANDONED

P. E. I. to Have a Ferry Service With the Mainland

PROPOSED CAR SERVICE

Ottawa, Dec. 29.—The people of Prince Edward will at last have a car ferry service to the mainland. Such was the official announcement last night, and the efforts of the two Conservative members, Messrs. McLean and Nicholson during the last two months are at length crowned with success.

A long felt want of the people of Prince Edward Island has thus at last been satisfied by the present action of the present Government. The island province came into confederation under a distinct promise by the Dominion Government to maintain a connection all the year round between the island and the mainland. The Government of Sir John Macdonald implemented this pledge in good faith, but the Liberals under the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier insisted that a tunnel should be built as the only effective method of carrying out the contract of confederation.

The Government has met the wishes of the baby province by arranging at once for the installation of a car service between the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Intercolonial Railway, and for this purpose the guage of the P. E. I. Railway will be increased from three feet six inches to four feet eight and a half inches, the standard gauge.

A semi-official announcement given out in the Premier's office says: "The proposal of the Government will involve the change of narrow gauge to standard gauge on the P. E. I. Railway. This improved service will do away with the three short hauls and it is confidently anticipated that it will result in great advantage to the people of the island, and especially to the farmers and other producers."

Baptist Pastor Has Alibi.

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 29.—A congregation in Quanah, Texas, was hearing Rev. Chas. M. Brewer preach a sermon on "Practical Christianity" at the time of the blowing up of the Government bridge at Fort Riley, Kansas, in which the pastor's name was implicated through a confession of Private Michael Quirk, according to a statement made here yesterday by Rev. Mr. Brewer. The Minister was passing through the city on the way from Olustee, Okla., his home, to Fort Riley, where, he says, he will investigate the conditions leading up to his arrest, and demand an explanation of Government officials.

Rev. Mr. Brewer's arrest followed a confession by Private Quirk, in which he said he had met the pastor, formerly chaplain at the fort, riding in an automobile with a woman, and that they had asked him to join them in blowing up the big bridge over the Kansas River.

Montreal D.R.O. on Trial.

Montreal, Dec. 29.—The trial of Albert Gingras, returning officer for the division of Maisonneuve, at the last federal election, on a charge of attempting to defraud the Dominion Government by falsifying election accounts continued yesterday afternoon before Judge Lanctot.

A number of deputy returning officers were called as witnesses for the prosecution, some of who denied signatures on accounts said to be theirs, while others declared that they had signed the accounts in blank, leaving Dr. Gingras to fill in the figures, and still others, looking over accounts for their polls, pleaded ignorance of charges for transport and police service presented to the Dominion Government.

Suicide In Sunday School.

Woodstock, Dec. 29.—Choosing as his death bed the platform in the Sunday school room of Dundas street Methodist Church, Joseph Rogers, a resident of this city, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by blowing his brains out with a 32-calibre revolver.

The body of the unfortunate man was found by an employe of a local firm, who went to lay some carpet in the Sunday school room. It was lying in a pool of blood, and the man's head was resting on his overcoat, which had been neatly folded before the shooting took place.

Rogers attended prayer meeting in the church the night before and it is thought that he remained in the building all night. The deceased is a married man, but has been living apart from his wife for some time.

GAME OF STUD POKER

Started a Feud That Landed Two Indians in Court.

It was a little game of stud poker, played twelve years ago on Indian reserve near Hartford, Ont., that was the indirect cause of Elias and David Cook being landed behind two bars. Elias and David are descendants of one of the greatest Mohawk Indian chiefs of olden times. Elias is the father of David and they are two husky redmen.

The two accused Indians live in a shack next to that occupied by Walter General, a brother Mohawk. Years ago, when David Cook was a youth and Walter General was also in his teens, the young men used to indulge in little contests of chance such as "studs," "jack-pots," and other kindred amusements. Just a dozen years ago the young lads were indulging themselves in the pastime of attempting to capture one another's money, when one of them accused the other of cheating. Just which accused t'other was not made clear at the trial, but there was a fight and the game broke up and the usual games were discontinued.

The aboriginal families lived next to one another for years and the fight of three weeks ago was evidently the culmination of the old-time differences that have been kept up fairly continuously ever since. Just how it happened was not explained, but Walter General and the Cooks got into an argument and the two Cooks invaded Walter's shack, and, armed with stones, so it was stated by witnesses, commenced to give Walter a general beating up. The advent of police or other outsiders ended the fight, and the Cooks were jailed on charges of aggravated assault. They were given a preliminary hearing before a county justice of the peace at Ancaster and were committed for trial. They appeared before Judge Snider and elected for trial by a judge without a jury. Judge Monck took up their cases and the evidence taken consisted of widely differing versions supplied by various squaws and braves.

Judge Monck acquitted the prisoners as they had been in jail for some time and as it was an open question, after all possible evidence had been gleaned, regarding the point of who landed the first blow. The braves and their squaws trooped out of the court with the usual Indian stoicism, and the last heard of them they were on their way back to the mohawk reserve.

HANDY BLACKING BRUSH

Has Reservoir Attachment Which Supplies Blacking to Brush.

An ingenious blacking brush has been patented by an Illinois man. There are two brushes in the one implement and they are fastened on braces extending from a stock. One of these is to supply the blacking and is quite small. The other is much larger and is for polishing. Fastened along the side of the stock is a reservoir consisting of a large tube like those that contain paints or tooth paste. From this reservoir a small feed tube leads into the small brush and keeps it continually supplied with blacking—which the reservoir contains. If it is liquid blacking it will drip into the brush as needed and if it is paste it can be squeezed out by pressing the fountain tube. The implement, therefore, contains in itself the source of supply, the means to apply and the means to put the polishing touches on either the stove or the boot, accordingly as it is used.

GRAIN OF WHEAT

Prayer of Three Hundred and Ninety Words to be Inscribed Thereon.

Among many other wonders which the Peace River country is destined to produce in the wheat line, according to Bert Hendley, a homesteader from that country, is a challenger for the peculiar championship claimed by Bauch Mordecai, son of Zeebi Scheinemann, of Jerusalem. The would-be champion is Aaron Kirschlieff. He has selected a particularly large, perfect grain of wheat and is engaged, during his spare winter evenings, in inscribing upon it, in letters so small that only a powerful microscope could make it readable, a prayer for the Duke of Connaught. Kirschlieff expects to complete his task this winter and will then forward the odd little token of loyalty to Rideau Hall.

"The only other known instance of such difficult and painstaking work is that of the champion prayer of 38) Hebrew letters upon a grain of wheat for Sir Moses Montefiore. Sir Moses kept the prayer until his death, and it is now in the possession of one of his friends. Kirschlieff intends to inscribe 390 letters on his grain of Peace River wheat.

LIVE IN FLAG STATIONS

The Grand Trunk Pacific Makes Provision for Section Men.

Ninety-six of the new stations, out of the 150 contracted for in the spring, have been opened, 27 are under construction, and the balance will be completed in the spring. These stations on the Grand Trunk Pacific are an innovation as far as stations in Western Canada are concerned for they provide, unlike stations built heretofore, for the looking after the flag stations, points where trains only stop when there are passengers to get on or off, are in charge winter and summer of capable employes, and are kept heated day and night. The arrangement has been made with section men to live in these stations, quarters having been provided for them and in return for looking after the station and keeping it in shape for receiving passengers at all times, they have heat and rent free. The one stipulation that is put on by the company is that the agent or section man must be married, for in this way the company thinks they will receive better service.

On the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway the end of track has now reached 1057.5 miles west of Winnipeg. On the Alberta Coal Branch, which is being built from Bickerdike into the Brazeau Coal Fields, the track has reached mile 21.4 south of Bickerdike. On the Tofield-Calgary Branch the steel has been laid 105.3 miles south of Tofield. On the Young-Prince Albert Branch the end of track is at mile 67.3 north of Young. The entire portion of the Branch between Melville and Regina has been completed, a mileage of 98.4. The 52 miles on the Melville-Canora Branch has also been completed. On the Moose Jaw Branch between Regina and Moose Jaw, track has been laid 1.1 miles west of Regina. On the Mountain Division steel has been laid to the mouth of tunnel at mile 104 east of Prince Rupert.

CHRISTENED UNDER THE FALLS

An Indian Girl Baby Receives a Flowery Name.

A party of Indians went to Niagara Falls for the purpose of christening beneath the great cataract an infant Princess of the Iroquis tribe, thereby repeating the ceremony which was performed in March 1866, upon the same spot. The christening ceremony took place beneath the Horse Shoe Falls on the Canadian side shortly before dusk, and Indians in full regalia participated. The child is a grand child of Chief Thunderwater, who was christened in the same place. The girl is eleven months old, and was christened "Mahonicee," meaning "Morning Beauty," and "Au-paw-chee kau-paw-qua," meaning "woman whose name shall never die." The christening was performed by Rev. Geo. Sept mus Gerald Hares, pastor of St. Paul Methodist Episcopal Church.

SIX MILLION CHILDREN ILL

Hard and Difficult Way to Good Health—A Big Staff at Work Seeking a Remedy

Grave statements are made by Sir George Newman, chief medical officer of the London Board of Education, about the ill-health which is rampant among the children attending the nation's elementary schools. An extraordinarily large number of the six million children in these schools are suffering from one sort of disease or another, and, to make their condition more difficult to ameliorate or cure, many of them are constantly handicapped by having insufficient or improper food. Here are some of the diseases which flourish among the children:

10 per cent. suffer from a serious defection in vision.
3 to 5 per cent. suffer from defective hearing.
6 to 8 per cent. have adenoids, or enlarged tonsils, of sufficient degree to obstruct the nose or throat, and thus to require surgical treatment.
40 per cent. suffer from extensive decay of the teeth.
20 to 40 per cent. have unclean heads or bodies.
1 per cent. suffer from tuberculosis in readily recognised form.
1 to 2 per cent. are afflicted with heart disease.

Everybody will agree with the general proposition laid down in the report that a State cannot effectually insure itself against physical disease unless it begins with the children. To do this the machinery for the medical inspection of schoolchildren has been in operation since 1908, but its good effects are only now beginning to show, and there is still much ground to cover. The mass of ill-health is a serious obstacle to national well-being. Sir George Newman says with truth and force:—

"It cannot be doubted that in the aggregate this formidable category of disease and defects means a serious amount of suffering, incapacity, and inefficiency, which at least must greatly limit the opportunity and diminish the capacity of the child to receive and profit by the education which the State provides."

Work After School

A very small improvement in the health of the children may represent a very large gain in the physical health, capacity, and energy of the people as a whole.

A very interesting portion of the report deals with the efforts made by individual teachers and schools to bring about healthier ways of living among the children. "The way is difficult and hard," says Sir George, "partly because there is at present no Parliamentary grant in aid, and partly because of the complexity of the issues which are raised in relation to treatment."

No fewer than 995 medical officers, including seventy-nine women, and 335 nurses are giving their time to this work, and they have stimulated great interest all over the country in the subject of obtaining and maintaining health.

By way of proving the danger of putting young children to work after school hours, it is reported that at Halifax the average height of children who did not work was 59.8 inches and weight 81.5† pounds. Those who did such work showed an average height of only 54 inches and an average weight of 67 pounds. Out of 1,581 children, 65.4 of the boys and 64.9 of the girls suffered from flat-foot.

Taught to Wash

Remedial measures are varied and interesting. Seventy authorities have sanctioned expenditure on spectacles for scholars. Last year $5,000 was spent under this head. At Bradford there are evening classes for mothers with their babies, conducted by trained nurses. In a number of schools there are regular toothbrush drills, each child being provided with a mug, toothbrush and tooth powder. At one school, as the result of the cleansing reform the number of scholars wearing collars, originally only five per cent., was increased to eighty per cent., and this without compulsion.

At Wolverhampton children are taught to wash themselves, to care for their hands and nails, to brush their hair, to mend their clothes, to wash dirty pinafores, to eat nicely and daintily. An elaborate scheme of 'mothercraft' teaching is carried out in Tottenham school, the course including the washing and dressing of a baby doll, preparing and cleaning of bottles, cutting out and making clothes, mending and darning, first aid, metal polishing and other homelife matters. The girls are shown how a banana crate can be converted into an excellent baby's cot.

An immense number of meals were provided during the year for necessitous children. In London the number increased from 7,200,000 to 9,100,000. Outside London no fewer than 7,734,242 meals were provided. This was, however, less than in the previous year.—Lloyd's Weekly.

MYSTERIOUS BILLY SMITH

Murdered Boxer a Canadian by Birth —Some of His Battles.

Mysterious Billy Smith, the ex-pugilist, who was shot and fatally wounded at Portland, Ore., by Captain Loomis, was a Canadian, a native of St. John, New Brunswick. Late in the eighties, when still a mere boy, Amos Smith, for that was his correct name left home and made his way to the Pacific Coast. Always of a combative disposition and a natural fighter, under the instruction of Jack Dempsey, he soon developed into one of the greatest little fighters of his time.

He first came into prominence on the western coast when he met and defeated Billy Armstrong, the Montreal instructor, for the lightweight of the Pacific Coast, before the Occidental Club in San Francisco, in 1892.

Armstrong remembers the boy well. When asked about him, Billy said:

"Oh, yes, I remember Mysterious Billy Smith. He was on the coast when I was there in the nineties. There was another Billy Smith there at the time, known as Australian Billy, and it was to differentiate him from the latter that the nickname 'Mysterious' was applied to the St. John boy, but not altogether for this reason. It was in part applied because of the suddenness of his rise to prominence. When he first broke into the game he was a fresh-faced youngster of not more than nineteen or twenty years of age. His first victories were won against Frank Purcell and Spider Kelly. Then he defeated me in the fourteenth round of a battle for the Pacific Coast title. After this he went to Portland, where he defeated Shadow Maher, and then returned to 'Frisco, where he married a Miss Merchant.

"Smith was getting over the lightweight limit then, but was equally successful in the welter class. His first victory in this division was against Danny Needham on the coast. After disposing of everything in his class in the west he came east, where his fights with Tommy Ryan and Joe Walcott are still remembered as the most terrific of the period, his 25-round draw in '98 being a particularly good example of the various battles these men fought whenever they came together. After fighting for a few years in the east he returned to the coast, nominally the welterweight champion of the world. He settled in Portland, and the last I heard of him he was keeping a hotel in that city."

WHEN FOWLS FAIL

Mistakes That Are Made by the Back-Yard Poultry Fancier.

The most common mistake of poultry fanciers lies in the selection of breed. A few rough, barndoor mongrels are purchased, and expected to thrive and to pay their way with little or no attention. Variety counts for much in the poultry run, and the Anconas are about the best class one can obtain for this purpose. They are active, hardy birds, splendid foragers, excellent winter layers, and, though small, plump, useful table specimens.

Plymouth Rocks, which are black-and-white, come next in choice among suitable breeds; they, too, are hardy, and good layers. Black Spanish, with plumage of the metallic sheen, are excellent; and so are their cousins, the Black Minorcas. White birds of all varieties are out of place in the suburbs.

Strictly speaking, the housing plays a most important part in the question of egg production. The roosting-place should be as lofty as possible within reason, and, whilst it must on no account be draughty, it must be well ventilated. The best system is to allow fresh air to enter through an aperture near the ground, and to escape through a vent under the eaves of the roof; this ensures the free circulation of air.

The perches should be about twenty-two inches from the ground, and two inches square, and should be set so that they are perfectly horizontal—viz., not higher at one end than the other—otherwise the birds will crowd together at the higher end. Nest-boxes should be placed well away from the perches, and the nests should be made from clean hay, and not straw.

As for the flooring, it may be of natural earth or of concrete; a wooden floor is unsanitary, and should be avoided.

The run should naturally be as extensive as convenient, and it will save much bother if the top can also be roofed in with wire-netting; a small portion—say, six feet—should be covered with weather boards, so that it may be thoroughly dry during the winter. In this space the household ashes should be sifted, for there is nothing like a dust path to keep feathered stock in good condition.

A frequent cause of failure is overfeeding. "Killed by kindness" should be the epitaph to many back-yard fowls. A hen that is over-fat can never lay normally.

SIGHT RESTORED.

A farmer's wife who had much trouble with servants was accosted by one of them.

"I fear I shall not be able to work much longer. I think I am going blind."

"Why, how is that? You seem to get along pretty well with your work."

"Yes; but I can no longer see any meat on my plate at dinner."

The farmer's wife understood, and the next day the servants were served with very large and very thin pieces of meat.

"How nice!" the girl exclaimed. "My sight has come back. I can see better than ever.'

"How is that, Bella?" asked the mistress.

"Why, at this moment," replied Bella, "I can see the plate through the meat."

KING'S POWERS AND LIMITATIONS

What His Majesty King George of England May and May Not Do —His Prerogative

The Royal prerogative has always, from the early Saxon times, been recognized in England, yet at times the despotic ruling of tyrannical monarchs endangered the peace and welfare of the subjects.

It was owing to such despotism and abuse of the Royal power that the nation forced the famous Magna Charta from the wily King John at Runnymede in the year 1215; and later came the famous Bill of Rights of 1689, which enacted, amongst other things, that the suspending of, and dispensing with, laws by regal authority without the consent of Parliament was illegal.

Legally speaking, the King, as a King, can never be considered as a minor or under age, and when referring to the King in this respect it is meant the political King, and not the King as an individual.

Power that Never Dies

The King never dies—that is to say, the power never dies, but is, on the King's demise, immediately transferred to the next heir. The King can do no wrong; to the extent that no crime or other misconduct must ever be imputed against the Sovereign personally, and so whatever course of action he pursues he escapes punishment of any sort. No action can be brought against the Sovereign, even in civil matters, for the simple but very effective reason that he has supremacy over all the Courts of Justice, and therefore his jurisdiction is of the very highest.

Quite true, his acts may be contrary to law and invalid, but even then, such is the respect that is shown to him, that these acts will not be treated as wrongs, but merely that the King "was deceived" in the matter.

It is within the province of any member of either House of Parliament to mention therein matters concerning the King, and about which the member feels aggrieved, but it is done with marked delicacy and respect. More than one member has been sent to the Tower for mentioning matters concerning the King in a manner not considered courteous or respectful. The law holds that the King is not responsible for any negligence.

The King is the Chief Magistrate of the nation. He has the sole power of sending Ambassadors to foreign states, and of receiving Ambassadors at home, and it is within his prerogative to make treaties and alliances with foreign Powers, but if these affect the private rights of the subjects, Parliament must give its consent thereto.

The Fountain of Justice

He can make peace and war, and can grant passports to any individual to come into this country or to enter into any of its possessions. He can reject any Bill in Parliament if he think such Bill improper, though it must be stated here that the Crown's prerogative in this respect has become obsolete, and, as a matter of fact, has not been exercised for over two hundred years. The King is first in military command, and he has sole power of raising armies and fleets.

Perhaps one of the most important prerogatives of the King, so far as the liberty of the subject is concerned, is that of keeping the subject within the kingdom or recalling him when absent. This regal power is not at the present day exercised, though, if occasion arose, it could be put in force.

As Chief Magistrate of the realm, the King is the acknowledged Fountain of Justice, and hence it is that writs and all proceedings are given in the King's name.

Distress From Indigestion

Tried in Vain to Get a Cure—All Medicines Failed

Old Trouble Disappeared When the Liver and Bowels Were Set Right by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

You cannot make a greater mistake than to think that indigestion is confined to the stomach. It is a disease of the liver and bowels, and it is only by getting these organs healthy and active that you can ever hope to cure chronic indigestion.

Here are two cases reported by Mr. Skinner, which tell of continued failure to cure indigestion by dosing the stomach. Both were cured thoroughly by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. A. C. Skinner, Atlantic St., Hardwoodhill, Sydney, B.C., writes: "My wife was troubled with indigestion and tried all sorts of medicines in vain. Hearing about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, I got her to try them, and to our great delight she was cured. We would not think of being without them in the house for use when the liver and bowels became sluggish.

I told a friend about them and gave him a box. He had suffered from indigestion for yeras and tried most everything he could get. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills were also successful in his case, and he says they beat any medicine he ever came across."

THROUGH THE HIMALAYAS

Dr. and Mrs. Workman Visited the Remarkable Sachem Glacier.

Dr. W. Hunter Workman and Mrs. Bullock Workman have just returned to India from their attention to the Eastern Karakoram, and spent a month in the remarkable Siachen glacier.

This glacier, the largest valley glacier in Asia yet discovered, is probably fifty miles, if not more in length. It's upper half drains an immense area, and is fed by seven large branches nearly as wide as the main stream. One of them is more than twenty-five miles long, and leads to a great snow plateau lying at and above an altitude of 19,000 ft.

The highest mountains, Dr. Workman points out, life along the western slide of the glacier. Two peaks, rising respectively to heights of 25,210 ft. and 25,415 ft., dominate the Siachen, Dong Dong, and Bilapho glaciers. Another high point attained was a sharp peak of 21,000 ft. commanding an extensive view of the Siachen and of its wonderful mountain entourage.

MUSICAL THEORY

At one of the Yorkshire inns there is a pianist who can vamp to any song that any singer wishes to sing. He cannot read a note of music, yet, in the local vernacular, he "can play owt."

Recently, however, he met with an unexpected check. A man hummed over an air, but the pianist failed to get the key.

"Let's try it again," he said; and they tried it again.

Still it was of no use.

A third trial brought no better result.

Then the pianist turned to the singer in anger and said: "Sitha, Aw've tried that on t' white 'uns, Aw've tried tha on t' black 'uns, and Aw've tried tha on t' black and white 'uns mixed. It's no use; tha's singing between t' cracks!"

that are easily separated for cleaning and screws on any gas jet without changing the tip. According to the claims of the inventor, the heat of the flame is increased 500 times, yet the flame is entirely confined within the heater and there is no danger of fire nor of the flame being blown out by the wind, no matter how strong the latter may be. There is also no danger of asphyxiation. Any dish that can be prepared on the chafing dish can be cooked on this heater at practically no expense. It will even roast birds, the dome-like top acting as a cover and converting the apparatus into an oven. Baking, boiling and frying are also possible.

GREAT YEAR FOR BRUNETTES

Blondes do Not Show to Advantage in Season's Modes.

At a recent style show held in Washington under the patronage of a committee of society women the living models chosen were girls with brown hair and brown eyes. No matter how beautiful a girl of the blonde type might be, she did not have a chance of being chosen for the show. The blonde girl is not admired this season, for she does not bring out the good points of the new "creations" and "dreams" launched by the Paris dressmakers for the winter season.

Poiret, the most daring of the Paris dress artists, still clings to the oriental in his latest models. He has finally acknowledged his "jupe pantalon" or Turkish trouser skirt to be a failure, but the wonderful vivid coloring of the orient still holds his attention, and in some of his startling new afternoon and evening frocks he has combined vivid reds, blues, and greens—color schemes which would be lurid and terrible except when combined with the master hand of a Poiret and worn by a woman of the right type.

The fair beauty of a blonde model is eclipsed when she dons one of these frocks with its vivid color notes. She is not the woman to set it off to best advantage, so an olive skinned, almond-eyed beauty is chosen in her place. It is said there will be no flaxen haired models employed at any of the big style shows held in this country or Paris.

MUST NOT TEACH ETERNAL RIVALRY

French Woman Lawyer Says Women Must Win by Invasion Rather by Force.

Mlle. Helene Miropolski, of the French Bar, gave a very interesting lecture here on the subject "women and the bar."

It is four years since this brilliant young lawyer took the oath at the Palais de Justice and was entered on the rolls. There had been lady lawyers before her—four in all—but they had never attempted to practice. Now, it was known that Mlle. Miropolski took her profession in dead earnest, and that she intended once and for all to test the question whether women's assumed disability to plead at the Bar was not a legal fiction which would crumble at the first onslaught. For weeks, nay months, Paris was divided into two camps over this momentous issue. "What," asked the slaves of tradition, "a woman at the Bar! In toque and gown! Nonsense!"

And yet, one day long afterwards, in defiance of the time-honored traditions of the Palais, a tall, graceful girl, with dark eyes, wearing a counsel's black toque and gown, stood facing judge and jury at the Assizes, pleading in impassioned language for the prisoner in the dock, a woman.

"My first case," said Mlle. Miropolski to me as I sat in her study listening to her experience, "was one of child murder. My client was acquitted. Since then I have pleaded in all sorts of cases, civil, criminal, and divorce, and always alone. I have defended especially in 'crimed passionels,' my clients being chiefly women, but also men. Indeed, my last case was one in which the accused was a man, and I got him off, and he really deserved it.

"But I must tell you that I have not confined my activities to the courts. I have lectured up and down France on a variety of subjects, feminism, literature, pacifism—I am a convinced pacifist—and I have contributed frequently to newspapers and reviews. On looking back on the four years of my activity I experience a feeling of profound satisfaction that I chose the career of a lawyer. I mean to continue. Do I aspire to the magistracy? No, I prefer the role of 'avocat.' It is less humdrum.

"Of course, it has been an uphill battle for me. I am of the opinion that woman should obtain what she desires by suasion rather than by force. Woman must not preach the doctrine of eternal rivalry between the sexes, but rather alliance under cover of wise treaties safeguarding the rights of both."

Mlle. Miropolski is of Polish origin, as her name indicates, but she was born in Paris. She was brought up on Latin and Greek, and passed her baccalaureate in philosophy at the age of 16. She was then entered as a student of law and at the age of 20 was admitted to the Bar. She won her first case before she was 21. At 23 she was independent. She is just 24 years of age.

AMONG THE CANNIBALS

Rev. M. Paton Described Life in the New Hebrides.

Rev. M. Paton of the New Hebrides Islands, speaking in Almonte recently, described many of the customs of the cannibals among whom he labored. One cruel habit which they had was to bury alive those who had been ill for some time. He told of many such instances which he had come in touch with, and how in a couple of cases he had arrived in time to open the grave and save the victim before being suffocated.

He also described the ceremony at weddings, and explained that young girls only 12 years of age used to be married to old men in many cases, who would soon die with the result that the girl would be married many times, and each time she was married her rank in society became lower.

Since many of these people have become Christianized their habits have changed very much, and Rev. Mr. Paton said that now the women had equal rights with men.

There was no need of agitation for woman suffrage there, he said. When a girl wants to get married she just decides whom she desires and the man has to marry her.

GROWING TITLES ON THE INTERNATIONAL MARRIAGE TREE

One Match Springs from Another in the Alliances of American Heiresses with Ancient English Houses

WITHIN the last quarter of a century a curious international marriage tree has sprung up and developed wonderfully until now it is in a highly flourishing condition. American girls had married titled foreigners before that time, some of them even touching the hem of royalty, as did Miss Patterson, of Baltimore, who married a member of the Bonaparte family, and Miss Lee, of New York, whose first husband was a Prince of the royal house to which the present Kaiserin belongs and whose second husband was the great soldier and statesman, Count Waldersee.

Here and there throughout the country there were heiresses or beauties or young women happily combining both properties who by grace of these gifts won scions of houses of greater or less nobility. So few were these marriages, however, and so scattered that no one thought of making them an issue as has been attempted since the tree has grown to such proportions. It would be possible now to have a Burke or a De Brett or its equivalent of our own, including the names and connections of those who were born untitled but have acquired an ornamental prefix, and the volume would not be a small one.

The foreign alliances form a sort of endless chain, which is as good a substitute for descent through blood as could be imagined. One member of a family marries a nobleman and sets the example for others, or her bridesmaids are infected with the fever for a title. On the foreign side, too, certain families lean toward American alliances.

Most of the branches of this matrimonial tree are occupied by Englishmen, but of Italians, Frenchmen, Germans, Russians, Austrians and Hungarians there are not a few.

Married Jennie Jerome.

The tree may be said to have taken its real start in 1895, or about that time. It was then that Consuelo, daughter of William K. Vanderbilt, became the Duchess of Marlborough. To be sure, she was the second American girl to bear that title, the eighth duke having married Lillian, daughter of Commander Price, U. S. N., and widow of Louis Hamersley, of New York, but the circumstances of this union attracted far more attention than any international marriage had yet done. Both were young and an enormous fortune and a splendid name and estate were joined together with dazzling possibilities.

A son of the seventh Duke of Marlborough had married the brilliant Jennie Jerome, daughter of Leonard Jerome, of New York. Consuelo Vanderbilt was named for Consuelo Yznaga, of Louisiana, who had married the Duke of Manchester and whose sister, Natica, had married Sir Lister Lister Kaye, Bart.

One of the very youthful bridesmaids of the young Duchess was Miss May Goelet, Ogden Goelet's daughter, whose aunt, Leila Wilson, had married the Rt. Hon. Sir Michael Herbert. Eight years later Miss Goelet herself was married to an Englishman, Henry John Innes-Ker, eighth Duke of Roxburghe and grandson of the seventh Duke of Marlborough.

The Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe hold a high place in English society and have received many marks of royal favor both from King Edward VII. and Alexandra and from King George V. and Queen Mary. They have entertained royal guests at their magnificent estate, Floors Castle, in Scotland, and have been included in select parties approved by the King and Queen at other great houses. They have no children, and the next in succession is the Duke's brother, Lord Alastair Robert Innes-Ker, captain of the Royal Horse Guards, who married in 1907 Miss Anne Breese, daughter of W. R. Breese, of New York. Her cousin, Eloise Breese, married in 1905 Lord Gilbert Willoughby de Eresby, heir to the Earl of Ancaster, who had a fine army record and had taken a prominent part in public affairs, being Member of Parliament and a Justice of the Peace.

As Miss Goelet had officiated as bridesmaid at the Vanderbilt-Marlborough wedding and stepped into a foreign alliance, so did one of her bridesmaids, Miss Beatrice Mills, daughter of Ogden Mills, who a few years later became Lady Granard, wife of Bernard Arthur William Patrick Hastings Forbes, eighth earl of his line, a baronet and captain of the Scots Guards. He is a Catholic and holds various Spanish and Prussian orders, was an officer at King Edward's court and played a very prominent part in the coronation ceremonies last summer.

Favored American Marriages.

Miss Mills' cousin, Miss Jean Reid, daughter of Whitelaw Reid, married the Hon. John Hubert Ward, brother of the Earl of Dudley, who served in Africa as an aide de camp and held an important place at court.

Another English noble family that has shown a marked predilection for American alliances is that of Coventry. In 1904, George William Coventry, Viscount Deerhurst, married Virginia, stepdaughter of Charles William Bonynge. His brother, the Hon. Charles John Coventry, in 1909 married Lily, younger daughter of Fitz Hugh Whitehouse, of Newport, and another brother, the Hon. Henry Thomas Coventry, married the daughter of Colonel Lawrence Kip, of New York. His cousin, the Earl of Craven, married in 1892, Cornelia, daughter of Bradley Martin.

When Vivien Gould, daughter of George J. Gould, married Baron Decies, of the noble house of Beresford, there was among the ushers a young man, Lord Camoys, who recently returned to be the principal at a wedding, his bride the Hon. Charles Beresford Fulke Greville, Mrs. Henry Kerr, daughter of Mrs. J. W. Grace, of New York, became Lady Greville by the succession of her husband to the title. A daughter of Mr. M. P. Grace, Elena, in 1901 became the wife of Richard Walter John Hely-Hutchinson, sixth Earl of Donoughmore, whose principal seat is in County Tipperary, Ireland.

The present Duke of Manchester is the son of an American mother and married an American girl, Helene Zimmerman.

Marriage of the Misses Leiter.

The same year that Consuelo Vanderbilt became Duchess of Marlborough, Mary Victoria, oldest daughter of Levi Z. Leiter, of Chicago and Washington, D. C., was married in the latter city to the Hon. George Nathaniel Curzon, eldest son of Lord Scarsdale. By his appointment as Viceroy of India she attained to one of the highest positions that can be held by any one except royalty in the empire of Great Britain. Miss Leiter's two bridesmaids were her sisters, Miss Nannie and Miss Marguerite Hyde (Daisy) Leiter, both of whom married British subjects. Miss Daisy Leiter became Lady Suffolk, the wife of the Earl of Suffolk, a branch of the illustrious Howard family, who had been an aide de camp to Lord Curzon in India. Miss Nannie Leiter married only a military title, but her husband, Colonel Colin Campbell, is a member of the famous Campbell clan, the head of which is the Duke of Argyle.

Mr. William C. Whitney's daughter became the wife of Almeric Hugh Paget, who has numerous titled relatives, and his stepdaughter is the wife of the Hon. Lionel Lambert, heir to the Earl of Cavan.

Closely associated with Miss Jean Reid and other American girls who married abroad was Miss Mildred Carter, who became last year the wife of Viscount Acheson, heir to the Earl of Gosford.

The first Baronet Cunard was the son of a Philadelphia merchant, and his grandson, Sir Bache Edward Cunard, came to America for his wife, Maude, daughter of Mr. E. F. Burke, of New York. Ernest Haliburton Cunard, nephew of the present Baronet, married Florence Padelford, daughter of the late James McPheeters, of Baltimore, so that the Cunard family is almost as much entitled to the name American as English.

Titled Family Transplanted.

It is not often that an entire family of noble birth and distinguished lineage is transplanted to this country, but at No. 443 First street, South Brooklyn, resides Sir Robert James Stuart Graham, Baronet of Esk, who married the daughter of Charles Burn, and at No. 450 Seventh avenue his son, Montrose Stuart Graham, heir to the title. His second son, Percival Harris Graham, married in 1901 Louise, daughter of John Wolfe, and resides with his father. The third son, Robert Vernon, married in 1904 Charlotte, daughter of Gilbert Baldwin Smith, and his address is No. 650 Fifth avenue, in that borough. The youngest son, George Edward, lives with his father. The Baron's brother, Charles Edward Graham, also lives in the United States, as does his sister, who married Mr. L. F. Gardiner, of Boston. All of this is duly recorded in Burke and De Brett.

Another Scotch nobleman living in this country is Sir James Stuart-Menteth, third Baronet, who in 1872 married Helen Gertrude, daughter of Darwin Fay, of Fulton, N. Y. He is descended from Walter, Lord High Steward of Scotland. His address is Canandaigua, N. Y.

UNCLE SAM'S CATS.

THAT the government carries on its payroll a large number of dogs, they being necessary for the use of the signal corps in Alaska, is widely known, but doubtless there are few who would believe it if told that Uncle Sam has thousands of cats which he employs at a cost of about $16 a year each.

The army has its regular corps of them, kept at the commissary depots of the great cities. It is customary for the officer in charge of each depot to submit to the War Department a request for an allowance for so many cats, and the regulations provide that meat shall be purchased for them at a price not greater than five cents a pound. To these rations is added a quantity of canned milk for variety.

In view of the fact that the government maintains these cats for the purpose of killing rats and mice it would seem that the great amount expended yearly for cat food could be saved by allowing the felines nothing but their prey as food. This, however, cannot be done for the reason that it has been proved by experiment that no matter how good the cats are as hunters, nor how abundant the pests, no cat thrives properly on a diet of unmitigated rat; nor does it neglect its duties when fed other food.

Not only has the army its large corps of cats, but all of the large government buildings throughout the country are provided with living rat traps. The New York Post Office alone spends nearly one hundred dollars a year for cat food.

Not only does Uncle Sam employ all kinds of cats from the yellow Tom to the silky Maltese, but he maintains in the Philippine Islands a small army of "cold storage" cats. At the immense cold storage depot at Manila, where great quantities of provisions are kept, cats are most necessary, and at the establishment of the post there was sent there some of the famous cold storage breed. This breed originated in the great warehouses of a cold storage company, and has developed special qualifications for enduring extreme cold. These cold storage cats are short tailed, chubby, with long and heavy fur, and their eyebrows and whiskers are extraordinarily long and strong.

Lord Glenconner, recently made high commissioner to the general assembly of the Church of Scotland, receives $10,000 a year for his work, which consists in the main of one speech a year at the opening of the assembly. The Sculptors.

NIPPED IN THE BUD.

The Secret Society Which Robert Louis Stevenson Joined.

Readers of Stevenson have puzzled over the meaning of "I. J. R.," the initials of a mysterious society mentioned in the dedication to "Treasure Island." The veil is lifted at last by Charles Baxter, the novelist's executor, who in a letter to the London Daily Mail thus reveals the secret:

"As I am the last survivor of that small band which was composed of R. L. S., his cousin, R. A. M. Stevenson, James Walter Ferrier, who died young, affectionately commemorated by Stevenson in prose, I absolve myself from the oath of secrecy and decline to inflict upon myself the necessary tortures consequent upon my betrayal.

"The initials signify liberty, justice, reverence. The 'constitution' drafted by me and whole heartedly accepted by Stevenson (we were still in our teens) included, among other important objects, under the first head, 'the abolition of the hereditary privileges of the house of lords,' a phrase which occasionally raised stumbling blocks in impassioned orations. I remember as if it were yesterday Stevenson's agonized face as he came to me with the news that his father had come across the draft. It never went further. The discovery was the occasion of one of the most painful of the scenes between father and son."

Sentenced to the Front Bench.

A new penalty not provided for in the penal code has been put in practice by some of the city magistrates for women of peppery tempers who bring their neighborhood squabbles into court.

After several witnesses have been heard on each side the magistrate announces in a stern voice:

"The defendant is held in $400 bail on the front bench."

The complainant is radiant with triumph as she and her friends are shooed out of court by the attendants.

The defendant is bewildered as a court attendant escorts her to the front bench and her friends leave the building. In half an hour or so an attendant opens the gate and tells her to go home. She has had a lesson without a fine or a prison cell.—New York Sun.

Cork Varnish For Ships.

In order to protect the interior of ships from the humidity caused by condensation upon the metallic walls during sudden changes of temperature the Italian marine has experimented with a kind of hygroscopic varnish or coating, the essential compound of which is ground cork, which is consolidated by pressure with copal and litharge and applied to the walls. It has been found that the cork varnish absorbs the watery vapor of the atmosphere to the extent of eight or nine grams for every square meter of surface exposed.—Scientific American.

Time Would Tell.

Sir Thomas Gibson Carmichael has retailed a good yarn of a juryman, who one day rushed into a court and said: "Oh, my lord, if you can excuse me, pray do. I don't know which will die first—my wife or my daughter."

"Dear me, that's sad," replied the innocent judge. "Certainly; you are excused."

The next day the juryman was met by a friend, who asked: "How's your wife and daughter?"

"They're all right, thank you. Why do you ask?"

"Why, yesterday you said you did not know which would die first."

"Nor do I. That is a problem that time alone can solve."

British Coal Dwindling.

The London papers are impressed by the prediction in Sir William Ramsay's presidential address at a meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science recently, that unless the present rate of consumption is retarded England's coal fields will be exhausted in 175 years.

THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1—The Tiny Tads are falling from a mountain top one day,
"We should have tried some other way of coming down," they say.

2—Of course, they bump themselves a bit, but when they find a pool
They bathe their bruises in it till they make them nice and cool.

3—And pretty soon they feel so well that they can skip and hop,
And thus evade a Monkitten, who yells to them to stop.

4—And then they see a funny oaf, that's like a sweet potato,
"Oh, Sweet Potatoaf, please," they cry, "we don't know where to go."

5—"A little Angorang-outang is after us," they cry.
"Jump on my back," the creature says, "I'll show you how to fly."

6—He takes them swiftly down the hill, which makes them all feel glad,
"Potatoboganning is fine!" declares a Tiny Tad.

CONSUL IS BETTER.

Persian Foreign Minister Tenders Briton an Apology.

Teheran, Dec. 29.—The British Consul, W. A. Smart, who was wounded in an engagement between his Indian escort and 800 Kashgai tribesmen, is safe, having been brought from a caravansary where he received medical atention, to Kazeroon. The Persian Foreign Minister yesterday called on the British Minister and expressed deep regret on behalf of the regent and Government for the incident. He informed the British Minister that measures had been taken to ensure Consul Smart's safe arrival at his post at Shiraz and exemplary punishment for the offenders.

The Persian Government is extremely apprehensive lest Great Britain consider the incident justification for a punitive expedition, which might lead to prolonged, possibly to permanent occupation of Southern Persia.

W. Morgan Shuster, the American who was dismissed from the office of treasurer-general by the Cabinet, is still awaiting notification of his successor's appointment. He has suggested the appointment of F. E. Cairns, who was his principal American assistant, to act in the interim.

The telegraph lines to Tabriz have been restored, and it is presumed that the fighting in that district has ceased, but all despatches so far received from Tabriz are several days old and indicate that the Russians were in a desperate plight on Sunday and were awaiting reinforcements. They effected a truce, which was held until Monday, when heavy reinforcements arrived and the Russians renewed their attacks.

Russia's Plans in Persia.

St. Petersburg, Dec. 29.—The appointment of a Russian governor and chief of police for the city of Tabriz in Persia and the assumption by the Russians of the financial control of municipal affairs there, together with the institution of exclusively Russian courts of law is foreshadowed to-day in the semi-official Novoe Vremya.

Wholesale arrests and trials by court-martial of participants in the attacks on the Russian troops are to take place, while the constitutionalists are to be disarmed and stern measures taken for the re-establishment of order in the north.

Golden City Fire Swept.

Golden City, Dec. 29.—Thanks to the herculean efforts of every man in the neighborhood, and the use of dynamite, another devastating fire was prevented. The Mulligan House had a close call, and was only saved by wrecking an adjoining store and use of wet blankets.

The fire was caused by a defective electric light insulation in the upper floor of Joe Romaine's saloon, and was discovered by a little girl, who ran down stairs and told her mother about the smoke, and by the time she could investigate the whole roof was ablaze.

The total loss will probably exceed $80,000. The individual losses cannot at present be ascertained; but the following are burnt out: Saul Taub, confectioner; J. M. Forbes, J. P. Crawford, attorneys; T. E. Godson, magistrate; Carter & Wright, druggists; Evans & Co., gents' furnishings; Joe Romaine's saloon, where the fire started; Carteaus fancy goods store, Chinese laundry, Strathcona Hotel, Lang Supply Co., the heaviest losers; barber shop, Chinese restaurant, Imperial bakery, and old Lyric Theatre.

By the liberal use of dynamite, the fire was held in check at the bank saloon. The fire was confined to the west side of King street, and takes in four hundred feet of frontage.

Company's Big Profits.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Objections by counsel for the defence to evidence, which the Government seeks to introduce regarding the operations of the Kenwood Company and the Aetna Trading Company halted the packers' trial yesterday and caused Judge Carpenter to excuse the jury, pending the hearing of legal arguments.

The Government contends that the Kenwood Company, which was organized by the packers in 1900, and continued in business until 1905, was one of the alleged pools used to market the packers bye-products. It is alleged that the Kenwood Company dealt in oleomargarine and the Aetna Trading Company in the same period, dealt in casings.

The Government intends to show that the Kenwood Company's profits were $4,000,000 in one year, despite the fact that it was only incorporated with a capital stock of $14,000. The profits of the Aetna Trading Company are also alleged to have been proportionately large, by counsel for the Government.

Fatal Wreck.

Belleville, Dec. 29.—After deliberating for two hours, the coroner's jury brought in a verdict in reference to the accident on the G.T.R. here on Saturday night, whereby a brakeman, William S. Symons, lost his life and other employes were injured. The verdict was as follows: "That William S. Symons, brakeman, came to his death as the result of a collision on the east end of the G. T. R. here, and that no blame can be attached to the crews of the double-header train or the crew of the shunting engine. The cause of the accident was a misplaced switch, and in our opinion Switchman Mosaman neglected his duty to ascertain the extent, but from the evidence submitted we do not feel that all responsibility should be placed on him, as the switch may have been tampered with by some person unknown."

Nine Below in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, Dec. 29.—With unusually low temperatures in all parts of the northwest and Canada, the coldest weather of the season was recorded here yesterday when the thermometer reached nine below zero.

A temperature of 20 below is predicted in the next 24 hours.

Stabbed Erstwhile Friend.

Hamilton, Dec. 29.—Because he "stole" the sweetheart of his friend, Kennay Hoeyke lies at the city hospital with several wounds below the heart.

He was stabbed yesterday by his erstwhile friend, Vincent Bruno, who left the city immediately.

Mgr. Bello Banished.

Lisbon, Dec. 29.—The Government has issued a decree banishing for two years Mgr. Anthony Mendes Bello, the patriarch of Lisbon, the Bishop of Guarda and the administrator of the diocese of Oporto, from their respective districts. The ground on which the banishment is based is persistent opposition to the organization of cultural associations.

It was reported recently that the Government would prosecute Mgr. Bello on a charge of conspiring against the Government. The name of the creation of new cardinals, it being thought that he was likely soon to receive the red hat.

PETERBOROUGH FRIDAY DECEMBER 29 1911

THE EXAMINER demands, in the interest of the Ratepayers, that, before Monday next a pledge be given in writing by Hon. Adam Beck for the Hydro Commission and the City Council, that no money of the City will be spent or financial obligations incurred in regard to any Hydro-Electric contract or for transmission lines inside or outside the City without the matter being submitted to the Qualified Ratepayers.

DEPLORABLE CONDITIONS

Six Children Taken to the Children's Shelter by Agent Cochrane to be Looked After

FAMILY DESTITUTE

Six children, aged from one to 14 years, were taken to the Children's Shelter to be cared for, by Mr. Cochrane agent for the Society, last night. They are those of Mr. and Mrs. A. Windover. Mr. Cochrane stated to an Examiner reporter this morning, that his attention had been drawn to the family, two or three weeks ago, and upon investigation, found that Windover had gone to the lumber camp, leaving the family in a destitute condition, without food or fuel. Mrs. Windover contracted a severe attack of pneumonia and is now in the hospital. Mr. Cochrane stated that he had been informed that Windover had been working at the Auburn Power House dam, all summer, and had been earning good wages, as also was his seventeen-year-old son, but the former had been drinking all the time, and as a result, his family were bearing the trouble. Mr. Cochrane said that when his attention had first been called to the matter, he had provisions and fuel sent up to the family, but yesterday, some ladies called at the Windover home, which is at the north end of the city, and found the little children in a deplorable condition. The children were then taken to the Shelter, and the matter will be dealt with by the Magistrate.

CHINA NOT READY FOR A REPUBLIC

Special to The Examiner.

TORONTO, ONT., DEC. 29.—In a timely letter, received here to-day, T. E. Pierman, Canadian Missionary in Chentu for many years, says the people of China are not ready for a republic. Although the present revolution and many reforms are quite justified, he says graft has been enthroned for many years and cannot be displaced by force.

The masses of China are utterly unprepared to exercise the franchise, and only years of education can bring them to realization that their votes should not be bought and sold. He evidently thinks the advent of a republic would bring much bloodshed and disorder.

HON. ADAM BECK ON HYDRO-ELECTRIC BY-LAW

Chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission Addresses a Big Meeting of the Ratepayers in Grand Opera House on the Measure to Be Voted on Here on Monday.

Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission, at the power meeting in the Opera House last night, made an explicit statement in regard to giving the people an opportunity to express their opinion on the necessary money by-law and in making a contract, and this pledge, taken at its face value, would seem to remove the serious objection that has been taken to the measure. Mr. Beck stated that he would give a pledge in writing to the effect that the Hydro-Electric Commission would not enter into a contract with the Council until a money by-law had been submitted to the ratepayers of Peterborough. There was a very large attendance and the remarks of the speaker were followed with close attention.

On the platform with the Hon. Adam Beck were Mayor Elect Bradburn and the members of the City Council with Mr. G. N. Gordon and other aspirants for the aldermanic board, Messrs. E. A. Tanner, J. F. Lillicrap, W. H. Casement of Lakefield, Mr. E. A. Peck, M.P.P., Mr. T. E. Bradburn, ex-M.P.P., Mr. W. H. Moore and others.

Mayor Elect Bradburn in opening the meeting, announced that Hon. Adam Beck would answer any question that the audience would like to ask him in regard to the by-law. The chairman briefly reviewed the negotiations that the City Council had carried on in the past few years in regard to the by-law. He stated that they had first taken up the question of Burleigh Falls power, but that proposition had been dropped because they had found it was going to cost too much to develop power there. Later on the purchase of the Otonabee Power Company's plant had been under consideration, but the Council was informed that this was not for sale. Then they considered the question of securing power from the Dickson Company dam at Lakefield, but had been advised by the Hydro-Electric Commission that this would cost too much. Then the Council had applied to the Hydro-Electric Commission and the latter had gone into the matter fully. They asked the Council to submit a by-law. The measure to be voted on on Monday did not necessarily bind the Council. They would have to go to the people and ask for the money necessary for the cost of transmission, etc.

The speaker regretted the absence of Mayor Morrow and stated that that gentleman had been called out of the city on urgent business. He was, however, fully in favour of the by-law as was every member of the Council.

HON. ADAM BECK.

Hon. Mr. Beck commenced his address by congratulating Mr. Bradburn on having been honoured by being elected Mayor of Peterborough for 1912 by acclamation.

He, the speaker, was not present on a political mission, he explained; it was not a question of politics. Neither was he present in the capacity of a power vendour. He was simply one of three representatives of the Government who had gone into the principles of provincial and municipal ownership as regards electrical power. The purpose of the Hydro-Electric Commission, was, he stated, to make electric power available to the people at the lowest possible cost and to make it one of the commonest commodities so that it would be within the reach of the poor man as well as the rich. The speaker went fully into the history of the formation of the Commission, as he has already done on a previous visit to the city. He pointed out how the idea had originated among a number of Western Ontario municipalities and had been taken up and carried on by the Ontario government. In fourteen municipalities by-laws similar to that before the ratepayers of Peterborough were submitted. There was strong opposition to the proposition, much along the same lines as was found in Peterborough at the present time. Complaints were made of ruinous expenditure, that the tax rates would increase, etc. These came from private corporations and the speaker said he did not blame the corporations for doing all in their power to defeat the measure. Not only was there strong influence from the corporations in Ontario, but also from others across the border who feared that the wave of public ownership would spread into their midst. Their fears were well-founded, too, as recently New York State had appointed a commission to follow Ontario's lead in the matter of public owned power and the State of Illinois was considering the same question. It was in his mind not a question of power at $8 or $10, but it was a matter of great principle. It was a question of whether the people should develop their great natural resource of water power so that it would reach every city, town, hamlet or farm at the lowest possible price. Water power was a public utility in the greatest sense of the word. There was not a single coal mine in the province—water power was needed if the industrial supremacy of Ontario was going to be maintained.

The By-Laws Carried.

Going back to the first stages of the operations of the Commission, Hon. Mr. Beck stated that although Hamilton and Brantford, two of the partners in the scheme had withdrawn, the other municipalities had carried the by-laws by overwhelming majorities. Then estimates had been prepared and submitted as they would be in Peterborough, money by-laws were brought before the people, as they would be here and these carried by even larger majorities.

The speaker then reviewed the results of the Hydro-Electric work in some of the cities in which the Commission had operated, going fully into the figures. He showed that at Ottawa where in 1908 the rates had been 15c. per kilowat hour for domestic lighting, $30 to $150 for power purposes and $65 per street lamp, the domestic lighting rate had been cut to 7 1-2 c., the power charges to $25 to $30 and the cost per lamp for street lighting to $45. At Port Arthur, the Commission had been enabled to supply power at $2 per horse power less than their estimates. In London where they had to transmit their power 125 miles from Niagara Falls, the Commission were selling power for lighting purposes at 4 1-2 cents a kilowat hour and as a result had 6392 users. Electricity had been mad a common commodity and was available for the mass who had hitherto been able to afford only a coal oil lamp. The light bills in the houses of the labouring men in London ran from 25c. to 80c. per month and often these men used current for operating an electric iron as well.

In Berlin there was a surplus this year of $13106.13. Woodstock, in spite of making two reductions in the cost of lighting, had a surplus of $8453.83, while Guelph would have a surplus as the result of Hydro-Electric power of over $20,000. In Toronto the saving to the people was a million dollars per annum. The reduction of the Toronto Electric Light Company's prices had been forty per cent.

In explaining the advantages of the Hydro-Electric system, Hon. Mr. Beck pointed out the saving to the municipalities as a result of the Commission buying standard equipment in such quantities that the price was considerably reduced and stated that while reducing the cost of light and power at the end of thirty years the municipalities would own for all time to come their entire system, instead of having them in the hands of private corporations. The Commission followed the whole scheme from A to Z and the system must be a success from the point of development to the user.

The Local Situation.

In going into the local situation Hon. Mr. Beck stated that when they had first been asked to go into the question of power for Peterborough they had believed that there was an option with the Otonabee Power Co. for sale to the city. They had acted on that understanding but the only result had been that the Otonabee Power Company instead of being put out of business by the Seymour Power Company, had been taken into the arms of that concern. Speaking of the by-law to be voted on on Monday, Mr. Beck remarked that the Council would have to go back to the people with another by-law before any money could be expended. The Hydro-Electric Commission would not be a party to any action in which the citizens had not another voice. "If my word tonight is not sufficient," he remarked, "I will give you a pledge in writing that we will make no contract until another by-law has been submitted to you. The matter was no longer an experiment or a problem—the Commission were able to show what had been done.

However, the Commission wanted the people to give their council some authority. They had submitted estimates and the only result had been to enhance the value of the companies doing business in Lindsay and Peterborough. They could go on making estimates until Kingdom Come if the municipalities did not take some action. Monday's by-law was not a money by-law; they could call it a plebiscite if they so desired. If the people of Peterborough wanted the Otonabee Power Company's plant, let them vote for the by-law on Monday, and the Commission would get it for them; if they wanted the Auburn Power plant, let them vote for the by-law and the Commission would secure that for them.

Mr. Beck said that there was no fixed price for Hydro-Electric power. There was an annual adjustment and the excess was returned to the muni-

EXAMINER'S NEW STORY

"The Secret of Paul Farley" by John March is the Title of the Next Serial For This Paper

STARTS NEXT WEEK

The Examiner's new serial story, which will be commenced next week, is "The Secret of Paul Farley," by John March, and promises to be one of the most interesting in the series issued by this paper. Probably no feature of the Examiner is more appreciated by its readers than is the serial story, and, realising that fact, we have at all times, endeavoured to secure the best possible fiction. That the Examiner has been successful in carrying out this policy, has been unmistakably demonstrated by frequently expressed approval of the readers. You will find "The Secret of Paul Farley" just about the best story we have given you. That is a pretty wide statement, but the story is good enough to justify. "The Secret of Paul Farley" is a fascinating romance with well-delineated characters and a strong engrossing action. The interest never flags from start to finish. By all means do not miss the first instalment of this story

BAD FIRE AT HUNTSVILLE

Special to The Examiner.

HUNTSVILLE, ONT., DEC. 29.—Several families had narrow escapes in their night robes, early this morning, when a fire wiped out three stores and a number of dwellings here, with a loss of $15,000. The hard work of the firemen and citizens saved the town from destruction.

Serious Accident

LIFFORD, DEC. 29.— Lifford hill, the scene of much innocent and harmless delight in the past was instead the scene of a very sad accident on Wednesday night. A number of the boys were sleigh-riding and came once too often. Somehow or other the sleigh became unmanageable and its four occupants were precipitated in a heap upon the centre of a very hard road. The consequences were that Harry Smith, a young man, had his leg badly broken above the knee and Gurvin Mulligan had one eye cut open and closed and was in a semi-conscious state until the next afternoon. Clarence Neal and Sid Staples were more or less shaken up and had their clothes somewhat torn. Dr. Hamilton, of Bethany, set Smith's leg and he is now doing as well as can be expected.

COASTING ACCIDENT

Carl Breckenbridge, a young lad residing in the West End, was badly cut about the head, as a result of a coasting accident, last night. The victim, together with several other companions, was coasting down the ice-covered slopes of Victoria Park, when the sleigh upon which young Breckenbridge was mounted, swerved from its course and crashed into a tree. The victim of the accident was thrown from the sleigh with violent force, landing on his face and hands on the jagged ice, which covered that portion of the park. Besides sustaining several nasty cuts about the face and head, he was badly shaken up. He was removed to his home, where his injuries were attended to.

ARE CONFIDENT OF SUCCESS

The prohibitionists of Lakefield are confident of passing the local option by-law on January 1st. They are putting up a strenuous campaign and reports from that centre indicate that a large proportion of the people are in favour of local option.

CASE OF LIGHT THAT FAILED LAST NIGHT

Otonabee Power Light Was Off on Account of Anchor Ice and Many Buildings Were in Darkness--No Light at Public Library or the G.T.R. Station.

Tallow candles and coal oil lamps were in great demand last night and to those who were fortunate enough to have either one or the other in the house, they proved conclusively that their days of usefulness are not yet past, even in this electrical age.

Anchor ice, or what is technically known as "frazil" ice, was directly responsible for the closing down of the Otonabee Power Company's plant. The tie-up took place between the hours of six, and seven, and continued until this afternoon. The transition from light to darkness was a gradual one, and for that reason many of the householders were prepared for the emergency, while those who were not, beat it to the nearest grocery for a supply of candles.

"Anchor ice in the water wheels" was the explanation offered by the Otonabee Power Company, in reply to a query by the Examiner this morning.

This is a trouble that is liable to affect any power company's plant, under similar circumstances, and for years has baffled the efforts of engineers to discover a remedy.

Pumping Station Affected.

The city pumping plant was also badly crippled, due to the presence of "frazil" in the water. For the greater portion of the night only one pump was in operation, and it was found necessary to notify the Fire department to the effect that in event of a fire breaking out, the steam fire engine would have to be brought into requisition. Fortunately, however, there were no calls during the night, and this morning affairs at the pumping station had resumed a normal condition.

At The G. T. R. Station.

The lights at the G. T. R. station went out last night at 7 o'clock, and remained off all night. Considerable inconvenience resulted, as the onderboard and other electric-lighted signals were out of order. Old coal-oil lamps and candles were brought into use, and the outside signals had to be given with lanterns. Everything was in darkness at the station when the Toronto and Belleville trains came in, and considerable confusion prevailed as a result.

The Peterborough Public Library was also affected, having to close up at 7.45 p.m., al also were several of the local hotels. The merrymakers at the "Not Outs" dance, which was held in the Conservatory of Music hall last night, were compelled, by force of circumstances, to spend a portion of the evening with nothing but the old-fashioned tallow candle to illuminate the surroundings.

City of Hamilton Affected.

The City of Hamilton also experienced difficulty with their power supply, inasmuch as they were without light for over an hour, owing to trouble at Decew Falls.

MR. W. H. HILL NOT A CANDIDATE FOR COUNCIL

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—A correspondent of the city papers has criticised me because he says I am a candidate for membership of the City Council while I am a Water Commissioner and a member of the Board of Education. The correspondent appears to have been misled by similarity of names and occupation. The gentleman who is a candidate in the West Ward for the office of alderman is Mr. H. C. Hill, and I am not a candidate at this election in any ward for any position except that of a member of the Board of Education, and I have been re-elected by acclamation. The people of Peterborough have for a number of years given me a seat on the Board of Education, and I have through their votes been a Water Commissioner since the waterworks system was taken over by the city, and I am grateful to them for these manifestations of their confidence, but I am not trying to trespass on their good nature by also asking for a seat in the City Council. As a member of th Board of Education, I shall continue to serve the people on that Board to the best of my ability, but I have no desire at this time to enter the City Council and am not a candidate for a seat in that body.

Yours truly,
W. H. HILL.

OBITUARY

ALBERT HENRY COBB.

The death occurred at the residence of his father, Mr. Joseph H. Cobb, florist, 551 Aylmer street, at four o'clock this morning of Mr. Albert Henry Cobb, aged 55 years. The many friends in Peterborough of the deceased, who was well-known here, although he has been a resident of Brockville for the past fourteen years, will regret to learn of his demise. On Sept. 22nd, last, Mr. Cobb was seized with a paralytic stroke at Brockville, and was brought to Peterborough to the home of his parents, in October. His condition grew worse until death finally came, this morning.

The late Mr. Cobb was born in Peterborough on May 31st, 1856. He received his early education here in the Public Schools and Collegiate Institute, and then served his apprenticeship into the drug business with Mr. J. D. Tully. He graduated as a druggist from the Ontario School of Pharmacy, and, after a post graduate course and spending some years in Ottawa, went into the drug business in Brockville, which he continued until his illness came. He was a very highly-respected citizen of Brockville and his death will be regretted there in the same manner as it will be received in Peterborough.

For four years he had been Warden of Trinity Anglican Church in Brockville.

The deceased is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Cobb, Peterborough, and by a wife and three children—Joseph P. Cobb, in Lachine, Fraser Cobb in Brockville, and Miss Helen Cobb, in Peterborough.

For some years Mr. Cobb was secretary of the Peterborough and Ashburnham Horticultural society. The citizens will regret to learn of Mr. Cobb's death and will extend their sympathy to the family.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, to Little Lake cemetery. Rev. Canon Davidson will officiate. No flowers, by request.

MR. MICHAEL McCLIGGOTT.

After an illness extending over a period of some five months, Mr. Michael McCliggott, of 265 Carlisle avenue, East City, passed away at 9 o'clock last evening.

The deceased was forty-two years of age and was born in Douro. He has been a resident of the city for six years.

He is survived by two daugthers, Mary Madeline, and Frances. Four brothers also lament his demise, in the persons of James McCliggott, John, William and Edward, and four sisters, namely, Mrs. Jane McManus of Lakefield Mrs. Michael Barry of Vancouver Mrs. Patrick McMurray and Miss Teresa both of Douro.

The funeral cortege will proceed to St. Peter's Cathedral to-morrow morning, at 9 o'clock, and afterwards to St. Joseph's cemetery, Douro, for interment.

BURNED TO DEATH

RED DEER, ALTA. DEC. 29.—Two children, aged eleven and three, of a homesteader named Brayden, were burned to death on Christmas Eve, near Quill Lake.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving remembrance of Dorothy Levoir, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Levoir, who died the 29th of December, 1910, at Peterborough, Ont.

When we see the precious blossom,
That was tended with such care,
Rudely taken from our bosoms,
How our hearts almost despair!
Round the little grave we linger,
Till the setting sun is low,
Feeling all our hopes have perished,
With the flower we cherished so.

God has gathered in our darling,
Placed our bud among His flowers;
Taken back the child He lent us,
To a better world than ours.
—Mother.

Favours By-law

Mr. W. J. Johnston, aldermanic candidate for the north ward, is strongly in favour of the Hydro-Electric by-law and expressed himself so to a representative of the Examiner to-day. Speaking of last night's meeting, Mr. Johnston said that he couldn't understand how anyone who heard Hon. Mr. Beck's explanation could fail to support the by-law.

REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Dr. Sun Yat Sen Has Accepted Presidency of Provisional Government of Country

MAY LEAD TO STRUGGLE

Special to The Examiner

SHANGHAI, DEC. 29.—Dr. Sun Yat Sen has accepted the presidency of the provisional government of China in the following terms: "It is my duty to my honourable country to accept the great honour and responsibility of the presidency. I shall try to secure peace and permanent government as promptly as possible. My single aim will be to insure peace and contentment of the millions of my fellow countrymen." Sen has already assumed the reins of government of the revolutionary provinces. News of his appointment was received with a joyful demonstration on the part of the populace here, who regard Sen in the light of China's greatest patriot.

Just what the authorities of Pekin will do about it is unknown. It is believed that Sen will immediately demand recognition of the republic by foreign powers and will demand the withdrawal of the Imperial troops from strategical points along the borders of the revolutionary provinces. He is in favour of dismissing the reigning Manchus with an adequate pension, although many of his colleagues would prefer to cut off their heads.

LONDON, ENG., DEC. 29.—Sens' acceptance of the presidency of the Chinese Republic is regarded here as merely the beginning of a bloody struggle in China.

FUNERAL AT OTTAWA

Young Surveyor Found Dead is Buried

OTTAWA, DEC. 29.—The funeral of Kenneth J. Kingston, the young surveyor of this city, who was shot near Wetaweskawin, Sask., on the 16th, took place this morning. The body was brought east by Dr. Norman Wilson, of Winnipeg, cousin of the deceased, who was present at the inquest in the West. The Jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to his death by a rifle shot, fired by some one at present unknown. The Mounted Police are working on the case and hope to be able to throw further light on it before long. He was shot in the back, just about the point of the right shoulder blade. The bullet passed straight through and was not recovered. The hole was big enough to have been caused by a 44 lead bullet, but did not tear the body at all. The nose was broken, probably through pitching forward on his face.

Mr. Kingston, it will be remembered, is a brother of Mr. L. B. Kingston, who has been in Peterborough as an engineer for the Seymour Power Company.

"THE CHORUS LADY"

The coming of that great comedy success, "The Chorus Lady," will be heralded with delight by the patrons of the Grand, where she will appear New Year's Day, matinee and night. What is more wholesome than good humour? There is lots of that in "The Chorus Lady" and Patricia O'Brien, with her stage slang is a delight to the ear. The famous dressing room act is one of the cleverest scenes ever attempted on the stage, and shows the chorus room of the Broadway Theatre, New York, with the girls getting into their costumes for the night's performance.

TRAVELLERS GRATEFUL

The travelling staff of the George Matthews Company wish to express their appreciation of the kindness and hospitality accorded them by the management and officers of the Company during their first annual meeting, which was held at the Oriental Hotel yesterday. The knights of the road speak in terms of highest praise of the treatment accorded them.

HOCKEY

There will be no fee available for practice at the rink to-night, so the hockey players will turn out for gym. work at the Y. M. C. A. at 7.30 o'clock. A full attendance is expected.

THE POWER BY-LAW.

The Examiner may fairly claim that it has been the medium of protecting the public interests in connection with, especially, one feature of the power by-law.

It has shown that if the by-law were adopted, it placed the city council in a position to enter into a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission without consulting the people, as to their approval or disapproval of the money obligations incurred.

This objection to the by-law on the part of the Examiner, no doubt influenced Hon. Adam Beck, last night, to make this explicit statement:

> "I will give you my pledge in writing that the Hydro-Electric Commission, will enter into no contract with Peterborough for power until a money by-law is first submitted to the people."

If this statement, means that the people are to be allowed to pronounce upon any financial obligation to be incurred in respect of a contract with the Hydro-Electric Commission, the chief objection, from the Examiner's standpoint, has been met.

At the same time, it would be well to make assurance sure; to take Mr. Beck at his word; to secure his pledge in an official and permanent form—in writing. He has publicly declared his willingness to do this, and as a matter of good business, his offer should be put in concrete and unmistakable form.

If such a pledge on Mr. Beck's part, does not include any money by-law in respect of indebtedness the city may incur for the development and transmission of power to the city limits, and is limited only to transmission lines within the city, it loses a great part of its value. It still leaves open the possibility of the council, under the by-law and under the law, incurring a very considerable expenditure, without consulting the people. This point should be definitely cleared, and Mr. Beck's assurance should be obtained on this point, before the by-law becomes clear of the objection that the power of the people to pronounce upon all financial phases of any contract, is in any way denied, or not definitely assured.

Mayor-elect Bradburn last night would go no further, on behalf of the city council, than give the assurance that any money by-law for transmission lines within the city would be submitted to the people. He did not state that he would not sign any contract with the Commission till such money by-law was passed.

SMASHING BOURASSA.

The Toronto Telegram, ultra-Tory, shouts, "Bourassa must be smashed." The Telegram now demands destruction of what it helped to foster in the general elections. Bourassa was then welcomed as an ally—appeared on Conservative platforms, in Conservative interests, in the ultra-loyal and ultra-British province of Ontario. Now that the end has been served, now that power has been gained by help of the Nationalist movement, now that Nationalist influences is predominant in the government; now that it dictates the composition of Mr. Borden's cabinet; now that it has side-tracked and shelved the most important element of national and imperial policy—put the naval question into the back ground; now that Nationalism and what it represents, is proving a thorn in the flesh to the Borden government, the demand comes to have Bourassa (Nationalism) "smashed."

For whatever malign influence Nationalism has in the councils of Canada, for whatever of national humiliation it has inflicted upon Canada; for what the ultra-British and ultra-loyal Conservatives of Canada have had to suffer in surrendering their necks to the foot of Nationalism; for all this, Hon. Mr. Borden himself is to blame. It was Mr. Borden's countenance and encouragement that gave life to what of Nationalism is in existence to-day. It was Mr. Borden himself that created the necessity, for what the Tory Toronto Telegram urges, "smashing" Bourassa. Mr. Borden had his opportunity in the Drummond-Arthabaska election to "smash' 'Nationalism at its birth. It was in this election that Nationalism first presented itself in concrete form as the enemy of everything British, and as a discordant element in the national solidarity—a menace to the integrity of the Confederation. Here was Mr. Borden's chance to unite patriotically with Sir Wilfrid Laurier in fighting and denouncing the common enemy of both Liberal and Conservative—the common enemy of Canadian unity and imperial unity and interests. But Mr. Borden did nothing of the kind. He missed the chance of being a patriot and played the role of the opportunist politician. He could see no further than the opportunity, the occasion presented of embarrassing Laurier—of "smashing" Laurier and gaining power, if over the ruins of Confederation and British connection, no matter. He passively, if not actively, encouraged the Nationalist candidate; he permitted, without rebuke, his lieutenants to send congratulatory telegrams to the Nationalist candidate. He thus gave Nationalism, and all it represents, a standing which it would not have had if he had patriotically joined with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in denouncing, and practically nipping in the bud, the most dangerous element that has ever found place in the politics of the Dominion. Mr. Borden became its sponsor; he gave it vitality and he weakly surrendered to it then, as he has surrendered to it now, and has made it, or permitted it to become, the predominating influence in the government of a British dominion—an element hostile to the highest British and Canadian ideals. Mr. Borden could have strangled Nationalism as a baby; now that he has nurtured it, encouraged, petted and coddled it into a giant, as far as its power over him is concerned, he will find a good deal of trouble in meeting the demand of the Toronto Telegram to "smash' Bourassa.

SEEN AND HEARD

THE TURKEYS.

"The old-fashioned business man was tricky; but it is fashionable to-day for a business man to be chivalrous to his business associates as he would be to a lady."

The speaker was Miss Mary Garden. Seated in her drawing room at the Fitz-Charlton, she resumed:

"There's a Thanksgiving story that illustrates the methods of the old-fashioned, the extinct, business man.

"A business man, a poulterer, was in the habit of making 'claims' on all bills. Sometimes these claims were just, usually they were unjust; at any rate, by his generous use of them he got a discount on every purchase of 1 to 5 per cent.

"Well, on Thanksgiving season this tricky business man received a dozen barrels of dressed turkeys from a western dealer. Heretofore he had bought live turkeys from the dealer. Hence, now, he made the grievous error of writing and claiming for six birds that had sickened in the transit and had reached his storehouse dead.

"The western dealer replied to that claim as follows:

"'Dear sir,—We regret to say we find it impossible to allow claim put forward in yours of 24th instant. We have established a rule that all customers desiring live dressed turkeys must notify us of same in advance, so that we may ship birds in cars specially steam heated.

"'Turkeys without their feathers and insides are liable to contract pneumonia if shipped in ordinary way in refrigerator cars. The mortality among dressed turkeys was very pronounced this year.—Yours sadly.'"
—Washington Star.

What Happened.—They'd been telling dog stories, but the old man sighed as each told his tale. "Ah," he said at last, "but my little dog Jumbo, he was a dog." "And what happened?" they asked. "He's gorn," said the old man sorrowfully. "His death was a most affectin' thing. Times were bad with me just then. Piece by piece the furniture went, till at last we had only the bed left. Then came the hardest knock of all—December 31st." "How was that?" they queried. "Ever 'eard of the Inland Revenue?" said the old man. "Yes, but what's that got to do with the dog?" "Everything. He heard me tell the missus on the night of the 30th that I hadn't a ha'p'ny left, and he was that considerate he went out and died in the cold." "Rather than eat —" "Eat? No, rather than live another day and let me in for a new license."

The Scholars were asked.—During a Scripture examination in an elementary day school in Scotland, the scholars were asked the question—"Who wrote the Acts of the Apostles?" Now the class contained a scholar who was not very good at Scripture, and the teacher had told him not to answer any question unless he was sure of the answer. On the inspector repeating the question up goes little Tommy Brown's hand. "Well, my little man, and who wrote the Acts of the Apostles?" "Please, sir, Shakespeare," was the boy's ready response.

The Unexpected.—All things have a resurrection except the emotions. They are born, they die; they never return.

How Royalty Has Utilized The Privileges Of Leap Year

The ladies are confronted with Leap Year, in which a great privilege lies before them. Is it not well to be prepared early for the situation that awaits them.

That is why some illustrious examples have been culled from the archives of the past for the benefit of the maidens of to-day.

Tradition credits several notable women with tales of how they proposed marriage to men, who in some cases rejected and, in others, accepted them, the more gallant facts of history give credit only to royalty for the exercise of the prerogative. Among the queens who proposed were:

Marie Therese, empress of Austria, and queen of Hungary, was sole heiress to the Austrian dominions when she met the Archduke Francis Joseph of Lorraine, in 1735. With the imperiousness that characterized her, she chose Francis for her husband and ordered the ministers of her father, Charles VI., to notify him of the honour. Francis was, fortunately for her, enamoured of her wonderful beauty. He accepted formally, but their marriage proved remarkably happy for a royal one. Marie Therese made Francis her co-regent in 1740 and emperor in 1750.

A Russian Method.

Elizabeth of Russia, daughter of Peter the Great, dispossessed of her rights by the Regent Anna Leopoldowna, and her son, Ivan, came back to the throne of her father through the conspiracy achieved by Alexis Razumovsky.

After her accession to Russia's throne, Elizabeth proposed marriage to Razumovsky, a request equivalent to a command, and married him morganatically in the palace chapel. Although Elizabeth had one daughter, she made Peter of Holstein, husband of the famous Empress Catherine, her heir. The marriage of Elizabeth and Razumovsky was not happy.

Elizabeth of England in the thirteenth year of her reign, found her kingdom in such a perilous crisis that she sent an ambassador to the Emperor Maximilian at Spires, informing him that she would be willing to make alliance with his brother, the Archduke Charles. The emperor replied that his brother "had turned his thoughts on another match and was now engaged to a princess with whom there could be no disputes on the subject of religion." Elizabeth naturally grew wroth over the ungracious refusal of her proposal, declaring "that she emperor had offered her so great an insult that if she had been a man instead of a woman, she would have defied him to single combat."

Catherine Parr, stepmother of Elizabeth and widow of Henry VIII., proposed to Thomas Seymour, brother of the Earl of Hertford, shortly after Henry's death, and before the reading of the dead king's will. Seymour was declared to have been in love with the Princess Elizabeth and to have become betrothed to Catherine simply for ambition, hoping that she would be made regent during the minority of her step-son, Edward. But the Earl of Hertford had been designated for that office. Seymour and Catherine were married in the chapel at Whitehall with Elizabeth for a witness, 30 days after Henry's death, that Catherine died, heart-broken by her husband's neglect and coldness, a few years later.

Queen Victoria's Way.

Queen Victoria of England proposed marriage to Prince Albert of Saxe-Cobourg-Gotha in 1839, a year after she had been crowned queen of England, succeeding her uncle, William IV., and when she was but 20 years of age. The Princess Victoria had been raised in retirement by her mother, the duchess of Kent, and her aunt, the duchess of Northumberland and without any expectation of the necessity of asking one of the royal gentlemen of Europe to become a prince-consort. Upon her accession to the throne however, the eligible royalties of Europe were diplomatically brought to her attention. Her interest, however, was won by the prince of Saxe-Gotha. The story goes that Quen Victoria made her proposal to the prince with maidenly modesty—in public view of Kensington Gardens! Their marriage was one of the most domestically placid in the history of royal families.

The most recent marriage effected through the known proposal of the woman was that of Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands to the Prince Consort Henry. Queen Wilhelmina who had ascended the throne as a child with her mother as regent, had an experience very similar to that of Queen Victoria. With the eligible royalties of Europe at her disposal, she selected a prince whose principal diplomatic claim was his obscurity.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

MY cat has two kittens—a little lady tiger kitty, and a sturdy little black boy kitten.

Usually this brother and sister play together very happily in their basket by the fire, but once in a while, I am disturbed by hearing a most terrible mewing. And the cause, I have found, is almost always this—the little tiger kitty has picked a quarrel with the black kitten. Now the black kitten is inclined to be rather quiet and ultra peaceable, but once he is aroused, he fights for all that's in him, and being larger and sturdier than his sister, is soon punishing her severely. Whereupon, little sister promptly shows the white feather and sets up a caterwauling which she knows will probably bring the mother kitty or me to her aid.

Doyou know this illogical and unworthy custom of my tiger kitty always makes me think of the equally illogical and unworthy custom of some of her superiors of the same sex?

Surely you know what I mean. The lack of logic, justice, and sense of fair play shown by the woman who asks to be put on an equal footing with men, and then resents it when he treats her as an equal.

I think the tiger kitty symbolizes the woman who claims her right to go into an office to do work, which used to be done exclusively by men, and then wants in addition to the rights of a man the special privileges of a woman.

I think my kitten symbolizes the woman who enters some professional, or artistic field as a competitor with men, and then is satisfied, or even anxious to have her work judged with lenience, because she is a woman. Agnes Repplier has a very stinging essay on this subject, in which she justly rebukes the woman who does not expect that her work should be fairly and squarely compared with men's work and adjudged good or bad on this basis, but is satisfied to have it called good "considering."

And now lest I leave a loophole for my friends, the anti-suffragists, I want to say what I think the kitten does NOT symbolize.

She does not stand for the woman who wants the vote, and yet still wants to be treated chivalrously by men, to have her physical weakness considered and respected.

It is one of the oldest and most common anti-suffrage arguments that if a woman gets the vote, she must not expect to have men give up their seats in the street car, or in other ways show her courtesy any longer.

To me this argument seems like the most absolute balderdash. Woman does not assume in asking for the vote that she is man's physical equal. She simply assumes that, insofar as the qualifications necessary to make her a voter are concerned, she is, or can soon be educated to be man's equal. This matter has nothing whatever to do with her physical qualifications or her need of chivalry.

A man would rise to give an old, sick or lame man a seat in a street car. And yet all these men are voters. The fact that they have the right to vote, does not deprive them of the privilege of being treated with kindness and consideration on account of their physical weakness.

In claiming her ability to do the same work as man, woman places herself on the same level of competition so far as that work goes and I think should ask no quarter in the struggle, but I do not see why either the fact that she competes with man in her daily work, or the fact that she wants to help govern herself should deprive her of man's courtesy and consideration in other relations of life.

I am ashamed of my own sex when it raises its weakness as a white feather and demands special privileges in a struggle which it has entered, with the declaration that it was willing to fight on equal terms.

I am ashamed of the other sex, when it makes woman's demands for justice, and her desire to do a man's work, if that is what she is fitted for, a pretext to deny her chivalry, courtesy, consideration, and protection, when her physical inferiority demand these.

Ruth Cameron

A happiness or a despair once gone is a phantom for ever. You may know a man for twenty years, and in the twenty-first year he will do something which will make all your twenty years' experience count for nought. Then you say . . . "I should never have expected this from A." Just as if A would have expected it of himself. Men astonish themselves far more than they do their friends.—John Oliver Hobbs.

Wm. Langford Jr.

For North Ward Alderman

To The Ratepayers—

I am in favour of The Hydro Electric bylaw, but if elected will support only such a proposition as will give the city the lowest possible rates for power & light.

The city's interest will be looked after to the best of my ability and its affairs managed as economically as possible consistent with the progress of the city. 5d-148

Yours Respectfully,

Wm. Langford Jr.

Card From

Ex-Alderman Gillespie

Centre Ward

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough.

Ladies and Gentlemen—

Having been again urged by a large number of ratepayers interested in the welfare of the city, I have consented to accept the nomination for Alderman for 1912.

My previous record in the Council is known to you all. If again honoured with your confidence I will endeavour to render such efficient service as will conduce to the best interests of the city irrespective of wards or boundaries.

As my business engagements will not permit me to personally interview the Electors, I take this means of soliciting your votes and influence.

Yours respectfully,

Geo. A. Gillespie

Dec. 24, 1911.

MORROW

For Centre Ward

For the first time I present myself as a Candidate for election to the Council of the city.

I hope to receive a fair measure of support such as is freely accorded a new man, and new candidate.

If elected I will serve the city just as faithfully and as well as I can, never forgetting what is best for it and its people.

Time will not permit of a personal canvass, but I ask for support.

Yours Respectfully,

5d-148 Ladies & Gentlemen.

W. G. MORROW

VOTE TO RE-ELECT JOS. R. METHERAL

In CENTRE WARD

Ladies and Gentlemen:—

I have been entrusted with your confidence for the past three years and my record stands open before you. It may show no extraordinary ability, but an endeavour to be straight-forward and honest in all dealing. I have not been swayed by cliques or outside influences, but voted and worked at all times in the interests of the ratepayers in general and will continue to do so in the future, if re-elected. I would advise the electors to vote for the Hydro-Electric Commission Power By-law. I firmly believe that the Hydro-Electric Commission will give Peterborough power at rates considerably reduced from those at present in force, but I pledge myself that no contract for power either with the Hydro-Electric Commission or private corporation shall be signed by the City Council without a By-law to that effect being submitted to the ratepayers.

Wishing you all the Compliments of the Season.

JOS. R. METHERAL

G. N. GORDON

FOR ALDERMAN

CENTRE WARD

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CENTRE WARD.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

As a candidate for Alderman for one of the two seats in the Centre Ward I respectfully solicit your votes.

My platform is briefly this:

1. Obtain Hydro-Electric estimates and reports as to prices, terms, etc., of obtaining power for the city's manufacturers, and for house and store lighting.

2. Abate the nuisance caused by the G. T.R. using Bethune St. as a shunting yard, which injuriously affects hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of realty.

3. Obtain legislation allowing reduction of taxes on businesses and improvements and increasing taxation of land values, thus making the holders of vacant land pay their share of taxes.

4. Have every milk-vendor's milk inspected at least fortnightly and a report with the milkman's name published, showing the proportions of butter fat contained in each lot.

5. Consideration of the question of permanent improvement of highways.

6. Begin an aggressive campaign to obtain new industries and inaugurate a strong publicity scheme.

There are two Aldermen to be elected for the Centre Ward. G. A. Gillespie is contesting one seat with J. R. Metheral, and W. G. Morrow, of Charlotte St., is contesting the other seat with me.

If elected, I will energetically support a progressive campaign for the city's advancement.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I am, yours faithfully,

G. N. GORDON.

Dec. 26, 1911.

VOTE FOR

EX-ALDERMAN J. J. DUFFUS

IN THE WEST WARD

To the Ratepayers of the West Ward and Peterborough Citizens in general:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—Having the honour of being duly nominated and urged by a large number of representative citizens to be a candidate in the West Ward, I have decided to again enter the Aldermanic field. At it will be impossible for me to interview each voter, I hereby most respectfully solicit your support and influence to assure my election.

If you so honour me I will pledge myself to do my utmost to assist in executing the city's business in a prudent and business like manner.

New industries, to my mind, is the one essential toward the future growth and success of our city, and I am in favour of a vigorous campaign to obtain cheap power and light, and also to induce the Radial Railway Co. to make extensive extensions. I would like to see the centre of our city with a permanent roadway.

I am opposed to the policy of increasing a man's taxes every time he makes improvements and minor extensions, and would support a measure to eliminate this condition of affairs.

Wishing all a bright and prosperous New Year.

Yours very respectfully,

JOS. J. DUFFUS

4d-149.

Your Vote and Influence is solicited in favour of

Ald. Edgar

for the West Ward

In support of the Hydro-Electric Commission By-law and the efficient and economical management of the city's affairs.

Wishing you all the compliments of the season. 5d-148

Johnston

For North Ward

After an absence of three years from the council, I again present myself as a candidate for aldermanic honours. If elected I will serve the city to the best of my ability. There are important matters before the people, and with my previous experience I will be in a position to give these questions good intelligent consideration. Wishing the electors a Happy New Year. 5d-148

I Remain Yours Respectfully

W. J. JOHNSTON

To the Ratepayers of No. 1 Ward:

For the first time, I present myself as a candidate for election to Council of this city. I hope to receive your kind support and I shall try and make my services your gain. Equal rights to all and favours to none.

Wishing you all a prosperous coming year, and that your lights will be cheaper and brighter, I beg to remain,

Yours faithfully,

JAMES GARSIDE

Dec. 27, 1911. 4d-149.

The People's Candidate

For Alderman for No. 1 Ward

5d-148

To the Electors of Smith:

GENTLEMEN—

Having enjoyed the confidence of the Electors during the past two years and having performed the duties of Councillor to the very best of my judgment and I believe to the satisfaction of all, I again solicit your votes to secure my re-election, promising to continue to look after the best interests of the Township.

Wishing all the Season's Greetings, I am,

Yours faithfully,

ART ROSS HAS AMUSING EXPERIENCE IN NEW YORK

(Montreal Herald)

Art Ross is back from a Christmas visit to New York.

Arthur has a good story to tell on himself. He had previously been invited to turn out to practice with the N. Y. A. A. team on Saturday, at the St. Nicholas rink.

Arthur dropped in at the St. Nicholas rink and saw the trainer of the N. Y. A. C., who informed him that the N. Y. A. C's were away on a trip to Boston.

"Slip on a uniform and go out and play with those fellows, though" said the trainer, pointing out to a Naval Academy team who were utilizing the N. Y. A. C. hour on the ice.

And Arthur slipped into a N.Y.A. C. uniform accordingly and then slipped onto the ice.

The Naval Academy coach grabbed him right away and pointed out to him a position at left wing, where he was to play and showed him how to do it.

Now, being his first time on the ice this season, Arthur was a little slow to get away.

But the coach wasn't at all slow to tell him how to make a start.

"Hey, you gal darn Big Rummy," he shouted. "What you doing? Don't you know enough not to pass the puck forward. Who ever told you you knew how to play hockey? Say, come here, you mutt."

And Art docilely 'came here' like a little woolly lamb.

"Look," said the coach, "this is the way."

Here followed an exposition of the New York St. Nicholas rink and Spalding Athletic Guide brand of hockey.

"All right, sir," said Arthur meekly. "Thank you very much for taking so much trouble to show me"; and went back to the game.

Just about this time Arthur began to find his feet and decided to uncork a few.

The first was to corkscrew through the bunch and strike the puck part, the goal tender.

The next was to put in a hook shot that took the breath out of the players it passed, it went so swiftly.

And then followed various other stunts known to the habitues of the Montreal Arena as bearing the hall mark of having been designed, registered, copy-righted and otherwise patented by Arthur Ross.

The Naval Academy chaps couldn't begin to play that sort of game, and so they took it another way. They kept on to the big fellow and hammered him unmercifully.

And they know how to hammer in New York—even worse than a couple of local sheets know how to hammer the hall club.

The end of it all was, and is, Art Ross is as stiff as fifteen-year-old nag with four spavins, this morning.

If you don't believe it—ask him.

WOULD FIGHT JACK JOHNSON

NEW YORK, DEC. 23.—Jack Johnson is a much-sought-after fighter right now. He has received three offers within the last twenty-four hours, one coming from Harry Pollock, the official promoter, a second from Jack Curley of Chicago, manager of Jim Flynn, while the third is from Hugh McIntosh, the Australian fight promoter. Pollock is willing to hang up a purse of $25,000 for a ten-round bout with Jim Flynn in this city.

Jack Curley offers Johnson $20,000 as his share for a finish fight with Flynn in Canada, while McIntosh offers a guarantee of $30,000 with the privilege of receipts to fight Sam Langford, a twenty-round bout at Sydney, N.S.W., for the world's championship. Jack says he will accept McIntosh's offer if he will post the $30,000 with a reliable person in Chicago.

"BOMBARDIER" WELLS NEW WHITE HOPE

NEW YORK, DEC. 28.—The real "white hope" is 'Bombardier' Wells, the English fighter, in the opinion of Tex. Rickard, the promoter of the Jeffries-Johnson fight. Rickard is in New York on his way to his Argentine ranches.

"Wells is the best heavyweight in sight," said Richard to-day. "But he will need a year or eighteen months to develop and learn his business. He gives splendid promise, and may be a champion. I do not know about the other 'white hopes'. Carl Morris looked good to me at one time; but he did not start well in New York, and now has much to overcome to efface that Flynn fight from the memory of the sporting public.

"As to the negroes, there is no reason to doubt that both Joe Jeannette and Sam Langford would be dangerous opponents to Johnson. A bout between Jack Johnson and either would be a big affair, but it would not take on the proportions of the Jeffries-Johnson bout, for the reason that both men would be black, and the public prefers a white against a black or two whites".

"Oh, for a man to beat Johnson—a white man," sighed Tex. "It will be worth a cool million to the man who can produce him."

Morris Has Come Back

NEW YORK, DEC. 28.—That Carl Morris, the Oklahoma giant, really has come back and re-established himself as a formidable 'white hope' was the opinion expressed to-day by fight fans who saw him hammer Tom Kennedy, former amateur champion, into a pulp last night at the Empire A. C.

Morris' showing was a great surprise to those who saw "Fireman Jim" Flynn pound him up. He showed considerably more cleverness and steadiness, and went after Kennedy from the start. With more training such as last night's fight showed he needed, Morris, in the opinion of many fighting men, will make a splendid fight against Jack Johnson.

Morris led Kennedy in every round, hammering him all over the ring, but failing to follow it up with the final punch that was necessary to put his man out.

$11,000 BEAUTY WILL TRY COME-BACK STUNT.

CHICAGO, DEC. 28. — Russell Blackburne, the former Eastern League shortstop, for whom President Comiskey, of the Chicago Americans, paid $11,000, is to be given every chance to prove whether he is of major league calibre by Manager Callahan. In 1910 Blackburne proved a disappointment and last season he was out of the game with an injury of the knee. Callahan received word from Blackbourne yesterday, that the injury was practically cured

SPORTING NOTES

The O. H. A. was asked to-day for a ruling on the eligibility of players taking part in the games of the Ontario Lacrosse Association, during the past season, particularly the members of the Young Torontos.

The colours of the West Toronto Rangers of the Intermediate O. H. A. are gray, with blue trimmings, and stockings to match.

At Syracuse last night the Maple Leafs of Niagara Falls of the O. H. A. intermediate series defeated Cornell by 4 to 3. Cornell are the U. S. Intercollegiate champions.

The management of the Frontenac Hockey Club has been trying to effect an amalgamation with the Kingston Collegiate Institute O. H. A. junior team, so as to have one good strong O. H. A. seven for Kingston. Principal E. O. Sitter of the Collegiate refuses to meet the wishes of the Frontenacs, and says that the Collegiate boys will stand by themselves.

The Ottawa College hockey team will leave next Sunday for Boston, playing there on Monday night next. They will afterwards journey to New York, and tackle the New York Athletic Club on the night of Wednesday, January 3. Later in the season Father Stanton's proteges may return to meet Yale and Princeton.

Clarence Doheny, the brilliant goal-keeper of the first champion St. Michael's team, and who has been playing on the forward line for Cobourg since he left college, will be back again this winter, and will be a strong acquisition to the students.

No change of residence permits will be granted this year by the Executive Committee, and clubs would save themselves and the association considerable trouble by bearing this in mind. The new clause in the residence rule also prohibits players from villages or towns without hockey rinks playing in the O. H. A. Only residents of rural districts are eligible to play with the nearest O. H. A. town. For instance, five players sent in by the Drumbo Club are not eligible, because they reside in Plattsville. The players in question are Russ Hall, Harry Shoesenberg, Edson Curry, Albert Reeves, and Percy McKie.

Argonaut intermediates will play in Collingwood on New Year's night.

An exhibition game will be played on New Year's night at the Excelsior Rink between the senior Argonauts and the last T. A. A. C. team.

The O.H.A. championship season will begin on Monday (New Year's Day) and the prospects are for ice all over the Province. There will be no postponement of cancellations allowed on account of lack of practice, as all players are in the same predicament. Teams that are scheduled to play next week should send their certificates in at once, so as to get them back in time for the games. Junior teams must register their birth certificates at the same time. These birth certificates are to be of an official character from the Registrar-General's Department, or the local registrar.

McGill hockey players have been working in a little practice on the campus rink. The following players are reporting for practice: Warwick, Marin, Rankin, Hughes, Demouth, Laing, Foreman, Riley, Murray, Thompson, Williamson, Craig, McGill, Gilles, Gordon.

Hugh Burritt, formerly of the Strathconas, who was moved to Seaforth by his bank, will this winter play with the Seaforth juniors.

Dundalk and Markdale, who meet in a junior O.H.A. game at Markdale on New Year's Day, have asked that Ernie Cook, of Toronto, be sent to referee the game. This is the first request made to the O. H. A. secretary this season for an official.

The Eaton senior team will go to Midland on New Year's Day to play the intermediate team of that town an exhibition game.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Princess Patricia, and a party of fifteen will attend the opening amateur game in Ottawa Saturday between the Stewarton and Renfrew teams, and arrangements have also been made for the presence of the Governor-General's Foot Guards' brass band.

The secretary of the Ottawa section of the Interprovincial has received a letter from the main body, through Mr. Hicks, of Montreal, advising that a single schedule, to be terminated by Feb. 20, be played, but the Ottawa Clubs adhered to their double series, and wrote President Riddell that the series could not be made a success with the single schedule. The clubs also decided to wage war against the National Hockey Association in a certain sense, and will have several clashes of dates. Percy Lesueur and Herb. Jordan were appointed referees for the opening game on Saturday, and it was decided to adopt the Lesueur goal rule. The selection of governors for the Ottawa section was also found necessary. H. S. Southam of the Ottawa Citizen, and George Martel of Renfrew being unanimously chosen. The question of reinstating Herb. Jordan will be left in their hands.

John J. McGraw, Manager of the New York National league baseball team, which is just back from its successful invasion of Cuba, has no extravagant opinion of the Cuban ball players. He is a deep thinker, says McGraw, but a fast runner. "These Cubans are only fair ball players," is the way McGraw puts it. "They are as fast as lightning on the bases and they can throw to beat the band. They have picked up all the knacks of fielding, but they can not bat. Not only that, but they do not play what we call brainy baseball. Very little attention is given to brain work on the diamond. They perform the manual part of the game very well, but the keen, crafty headwork we see in the game here is missing. They know nothing about 'inside baseball' and we are able to out-trick them most of the time. In opposing a pitcher they look for speed and usually they hit a fast ball but when they try to solve the mysteries of a curve they churn the air."

MATT AND MITT NEWS.

Jack (Twin) Sullivan has signed to meet Tony Ross in Pittsburg, Dec. 29th.

Indianapolis fans should witness a classy bout when Jack Dillon and Leo Houck meet on New Year's Day.

If Freddie Welsh and Matty Baldwin can agree on the weight question, a New Orleans promoter will stage the bout Feb. 4th.

Pedlar Palmer, once champion bantam of England, couldn't come back, He was knocked out in ten rounds by Darkey Haley in Hoxton, Eng., recently.

George "Knockout" Brown, the Chicago fighter, who defeated Fritz Holland, the California fighter, in a bout a few night ago, was matched to-day to meet Jack Dillon, the Indianapolis fighter, in a fifteen round bout at South Bend on January 18th.

It is quite likely that Stanislaus Zbyszko, the giant Pole, will be matched shortly for a mat go with Giovanni Raicevitch, the Italian wrestler. Raicevitch, disgruntled over his Christmas match with Zyzsko, to-day offered to post $5,000 to bind another go. He offers to permit the winner to take all.

A Buffalo despatch says Jack (Twin) Sullivan's claim as a white hope got a good jolt, and Joe Jeanettes' claims as a possible contender for Jack Johnson's title faded into a joke before the eyes of almost four thousand fight fans, when Jeanette beat the famous Twin Tuesday night in ten rounds, and incidentally gave Jack the best licking he has ever experienced in a short bout.

Jack Curley, manager of Fireman Jim Flynn, who has challenged Jack Johnson, said yesterday that he would refuse the offer of Promoter Pollock of New York for a $25,000 purse for a 10-round bout. Curley wants his man to go the long route.

PECAN CANDY.

To one pound of light brown sugar add two-thirds of a cupful of boiling water and two even tablespoonfuls of butter and stir until it melts. Add just a pinch of cream of tarter and let the syrup boil without stirring until a drop of it will make a soft ball when rolled between the fingers. Pour in a cupful of pecan nut meats, stir and empty into buttered tins.

MR. J. M. GREENE WAS THE GUEST OF HONOUR

Head of Greene Music Company Was Banquetted by His Employees Last Night—Presented With Watch.

AN ENJOYABLE EVENT

An interesting event took place in Coleman's restaurant last evening, when Mr. J. M. Greene was banquetted by the employees and salesmen of the firm of the J. M. Greene Music Co., L't'd.

At the conclusion of a dainty and palatable dinner, a splendid musical programme was rendered, commencing with a toast "The King". Creditable vocal selections were rendered by Mrs. C. Greene, Mr. J. M. Greene, Mrs. A. Green and Mrs. Braund, and the Misses Conally and Gumpright delighted the assembly with their pianoforte solos. These items were interspersed by gramophone selections. During the evening several toasts were proposed, namely "Mr. J. M. Greene" "The Ladies" "The Firm," "The Salesmen" and "The Press," all of which were ably responded to. A feature of the proceedings was a presentation of a magnificent gold watch fob, by the employees of the firm, to Mr. J. M. Greene. The presentation was made by Mr. George Leader, the head piano salesman, and Mr. Greene, in a brief, but fitting address, returned thanks.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Mason of Springbrook, (representatives of the firm), Mrs. Wm. Bennett, Manager of the Lindsay branch, and Miss Conolly, clerk at Lindsay.

NOMINATIONS AT MILLBROOK

Nomination day on Friday last brought few surprises and more elections by acclamation than is usual. Reeve Kells of Millbrook was returned by acclamation as also were Reeve Rickson of Manvers and Reeve Thorne and Deputy Reeve McGill of Cavan. In Millbrook the former Council was returned except Major Winslow, who dropped out on account of indisposition, to the regret of all the ratepayers, Mr. R. J. Doak who has had former experience at the Council Board taking his place, so that the Council of 1912 will consist of Reeve Kells, Councillors Deyell, Burnham, McBride and Doak. Reeve Kelly having attained the highest rung in the ladder of municipal fame rests from his labours with the universal approval of the electors. Four new men are soliciting the support of the public for Councillors in Cavan, Messrs. J. H. Armstrong, A. J. Henderson, Western Williamson and H. Baptie along with Mr. Shield, the old Councillor. In Manvers Reeve Hickson has been again returned as chief of the Council another tangible tribute to his efficient management of the affairs of the municipality, not only at the local board but at the Counties' Council. The electors of Manvers seem disposed to give Joe another heat in the Warden's race. For Deputy in Manvers Mr. Armstrong is opposed by Mr. Gray, a former Councillor, while some new blood is offering for the Council. In South Monaghan Reeve Waterman is opposed by Mr. John Buckham, a reeve of some years ago. The following are in the contest:

Millbrook—Reeve, John C. Kells. Councillors—J. D. Deyell, Geo. E. Burnham, John McBride and R. J. Doak

Trustees—A. Leach, John Dawson, T. B. Collins and A. T. Armstrong, all elected by acclamation. Messrs. C. Neediler and R. W. Clarke having decided to spend some time in the West, dropped off the School Board.

Cavan—Reeve G. S. Thorne, acclamation. Deputy, J. N. McGill, acclamation. For Councillors—W. R. Shield, A. J. Henderson, J. H. Armstrong, H. Baptie and Western Williamson. Three to be elected on Monday next.

Manvers—Reeve, Joseph Hickson by acclamation. Deputy Reeve—Messrs. Armstrong and Gray. Councillors — Messrs. Sisson, McMullen, McMaster and Corbett. Mr. Hooper was nominated for the reeveship, but retired.

South Monaghan — For Reeve, W. Waterman and John Buckham. For Councillors—Messrs. Willan, Perrin, Jackson, Greer and Brackenridge.

HON. ADAM BECK

cipalities. The more consumers the cheaper the cost of power. In Western Ontario, he said the system was capable of 80,000 h.p. The rates this year had been adjusted on a basis of 19,000 hp.., but there was in sight 22,000 which would be used. This would mean that an amount of $100,000 would go back to the municipalities. Furthermore the speaker argued at the end of thirty years when the system was paid for the whole concern would become the property of the municipalities. The plan of the Commission was to have the Government develop and transmit power to the limits of the municipalities at 4 per cent. interest on the investment while the cost of distribution would be paid by the municipality. A sinking fund to cover depreciation and defray the cost of the plant was provided for.

Referring to the criticisms to Hydro-Electric power which had appeared in the press of Peterborough, Mr. Beck said that they were paid advertisements. He did not blame the corporations for trying to safeguard their monopoly, but he objected to them signing letters as "Rate payer" or "Citizen" and not coming out in the open. It was absurd to say that the Government would have the people of Peterborough by the throat if they carried the by-law. The Commission were the people, the Government was the people, and only as long as they served the people well and honestly would they be continued in power.

Reading some of the criticisms he referred to one in which he was asked to give some concrete proposition. If Peterborough voted in favour of the by-law on Monday he would give three propositions. If the people wanted the Otonabee Power Company's plant the Commission would get it for them. If they wanted the Auburn power they could have it, or if they were in favour of having the Government take over the entire power of the Trent district, this would be arranged Negotiations at Ottawa.

Regarding recent negotiations at Ottawa, Mr. Beck stated that the Commission, supported by a deputation from Peterborough and Lakefield, had asked for Dams 4 and 8 on the Trent Canal for the people, from the Dominion government. They had received from the Dominion government the reply that these dams were now available for the people. In addition, he stated that he had been approached by the Power oCmpany with several offers and the only one he could recommend was that they were ready to sell out. One of the representatives of the bond-holding company had proposed that Mr. Beck should make a thorough investigation of the company's system. He was authorized by the Premier to say that if such an investigation pointed to the investment as a good one in the interests of the people, the government would advance the necessary money whether four millions or eight millions were required.

He re-iterated his statement that he would give a pledge in writing that the Hydro-Electric Commission would not enter into any contract with the City of Peterborough until the ratepayers had another opportunity of expressing their opinion and voting on a money by-law.

On motion of Mr. W. H. Moore, seconded by Ald. Morgan, a hearty vote of thanks was passed to Hon. Mr. Beck for his address and the meeting closed with three cheers for the king.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON

The blood must be filtered, otherwise you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

PETERBOROUGH GIRL'S SUCCESS

Miss Geraldine Rudkins, senior graduate of Toronto University of Music, has just returned from Toronto, where she has been studying for some time, and is prepared to take a limited number of pupils in pianaforte vocal and theory at her studio at J. M. Greene and Co. music building, Charlotte street, on and after Jan. 2nd. Pupils prepared for University, Conservatory or College of Toronto. Phone 505.

SLEIGH UPSET

Probably the first accident of its kind of the season occurred this afternoon at the corner of King and George street, when a meat delivery sleigh slewed around the corner, struck a piece of bare ground and turned over, upsetting the meat out and otherwise damaging the sleigh but to no great extent. The driver managed to jump out and succeeded in quieting the horse, after a very exciting few seconds.

CREAM PEPPERMINT.

You will need for this recipe one pound of confectioners' sugar, six tablespoonfuls of water, eight drops of oil of peppermint, a scant quarter teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Take out one spoonful of sugar into a cup, drop into it the oil of peppermint and stir, adding also the cream of tartar. Now boil the rest of the sugar with the water until it forms a thread, then add the mixture from the cup and stir briskly. Drop from the end of a spoon in a buttered plate.

UNCLE EBEN'S PHILOSOPHY

BY J. B. PADDOCK.

"Well, if that ain't just a little the worst piece of new road I ever see!"

Silas Atkins, driving to town with a load of grain, was irritated to find the way strewn with a large number of loose stones, which gave the wagon a severe jolt every time that a wheel struck one of them. Just on the edge of the town the irate farmer pulled up his team and accosted a man who was working in a field beside the road.

"Say, Silas, ain't you the overseer in this here road district?" The man looked up.

"Why, good morning, Mr. Atkins! Yes, I'm the overseer in this district."

"Then why in all get out don't ye finish a road when ye make one?"

The overseer folded his arms and leaned on his hoe.

"Everybody's too busy," he replied. "The men just had time to grade the road. Later on they're going to put another day's work on it, and then the stones will be removed and the job fixed up right. But they won't be to get at it for a while yet."

Uncle Eben Benson, taking his cow to the pasture, overheard the conversation. A smile hovered on his face as he trudged patiently over the strip of new road toward the pasture, and his eyes carefully noted the cause of the farmer's complaint.

He walked slowly, with bent head and hands clasped behind him, and every now and then he placed his feet beside a stone and kicked it out of the wheel track. Near sundown when he went to bring his cow home for the night, he still seemed to be in deep thought, for he acted precisely as he had done in the morning.

The next day Silas Atkins, driving over the stretch with another load of wheat, was surprised to find it not so rough as it had seemed before. In the afternoon the road was still smoother; in fact, Silas was just passing off the bothersome strip before he realied where he was. He was completely mystified when the overseer congratulated him on his enterprise, disclaimed any knowledge of the improvement.

The following morning, however, he overtook Uncle Eben returning from putting his cow in the pasture. The old man was walking slowly, removing with his feet the few remaining stones, which were of sufficient size to be troublesome.

"Well, now, if that don't beat me," he exclaimed. "Good morning, Uncle Eb! Have a ride?"

Uncle Eben climbed up and took a seat beside him. Silas glanced at him quizzically.

"Some one hire ye to do it?" he said.

"Do what?" inquired Uncle Eben, innocently.

"Kick them stones out of the road."

"No," replied the old man, after a short silence, "no one said anything to me about doin' it. But I go over that bit of road four times a day, and seein' what a nuisance the stones was to travelers, why, it wasn't such of a job to knock one out of the way now and then."

"What I don't understand," said Silas, "is why ye should do it when ye get nothing for it."

"Get nothing?" Uncle Eben retorted. "I get more than I would if Sam hired me to do the job. Ye see, it's this way. Sam would pay a man seventy-five cents or a dollar for doin' what I've done. Now, everybody up in your part of the country that drives over that road will have a kind thought for me if they know I've cleared the stones away just to make drivin' pleasanter. If Sam had paid me a dollar for doin' it they wouldn't think any more about it."

Silas drove on toward town, with his eyes on the dashboard and his horse taking his own gait.

He was roused from his reverie by the bouncing of the wagon as one of the wheels passed over a loose stone. He halted the horse, got out, picked up the stone and dropped it carefully at the side of the road.

"Eben don't get down along as far as this," he said, half aloud, "and I ain't startin' an account of my own, but I reckon I'll just contribute a little in-something my conscience to his. But I reckon there ain't anything to tereat to his. Mebbe some persons will think he's been here."

ITALIANS DEFEATED

Turkish Forces Gained Signal Victory on Dec. 22

GARRISON ANNIHILATED

Washington, Dec. 30.—A 24-hour battle, in which the Turkish troops defeated the Italian force, killing half of it in the rout, is described in an official message from Constantinople made public at the Turkish embassy last night. The message was transmitted to the Imperial Minister of War at Constantinople by the commander of the Turkish troops from Tobruk, Tripoli, under date of Dec. 22.

The report follows: "We have attacked the fortified posts of the enemy. Notwithstanding the fire from the warships and fort batteries, we entered the fort and the garrison has been annihilated. Ammunitions, provisions, war material and a quick-firing gun have been carried into our camp.

"In its forward march one of our wings cut off the retreat of the enemy, who fled toward the coast. During the retreat the enemy lost half their number. The battle lasted all day and night. Among the killed were three officers of the enemy. Our losses were seven killed and a few wounded.

"The Sheik H. Meri, with his five sons, came at the head of his tribe, is among the dead. The courage of our officers and soldiers is exemplary. Lieut. Nedjib Bey was the first to enter the fort. He destroyed the quick-firing guns and carried away one into our camp."

Drove Off Turks.

Derna, Tripoli, Dec. 26.—(Delayed)—An Italian force, under Gen. Delbuono, while protecting engineers at work repairing the aqueduct, was strongly engaged by a large force of Turks with heavy artillery. The Italians, though hard pressed, managed to hold off the enemy until the work was completed, and then retired on their redoubts with a loss of three killed and 77 wounded.

D. J. McRae Buried.

Cornwall, Dec. 30.—The funeral of the late D. J. McRae of Bridge End, who figured so prominently in the recent McRae case, took place at St. Margaret's Church, Glen Navis, Thursday. Mr. McRae was the father of Mrs. (Dr.) Magee, Ottawa, whose trouble with her Protestant husband led to the attempt of Magee to remove his child from the McRae homestead, which resulted in the fatal shooting of one of his party, William Shaw, and the consequent conviction and life sentence for manslaughter of Farquhar D. McRae, reeve of Lancaster Township, and brother of deceased.

D. C. McRae was 73 years of age and leaves two sons and one daughter. was closely related to the Camerons, McDonalds, McLellans, McRaes and other Glengarry families.

The funeral was one of the largest ever held in the County of Glengarry. The service was attended by his lordship Bishop McDonnell of Alexandria, and six priests. Rev. Corbot McRae of this town was the celebrant of the requiem mass and the sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. J. E. McRae of St. Andrew's.

Quebec To Teach English.

Quebec, Dec. 30.—The Congress of the French Catholic school inspectors of the Province of Quebec was brought to a close at noon yesterday. A resolution was adopted urging strongly that the teaching of English be encouraged in the primary schools throughout the province.

SUN YAT SEN CHOSEN.

Delegates Select Him Provisionally and He Accepts.

Shanghai, Dec. 30.—Dr. Sun Yat Sen, after having received a definite report of his election to the presidency of the Republic of China by the delegates of the eighteen provinces in convention at Nanking spent the afternoon here yesterday in close conference with his advisers. There is reason to believe that the personnel of a cabinet will be announced almost immediately and that it will be representative of all sections holding the confidence of the people of China. Among those selected is Chen Chin Tao, who has accepted the portfolio of Minister of Finance. The president will select Gen. Li Yuen Heng as Minister of War.

After the selection of the cabinet the president's proclamation will be issued. This will outline the policy of the new government, offer terms to the Manchus for restoring order throughout the country, encouraging the re-opening of trade everywhere and guarantee the safety and protection of foreigners. Within a day or two President Sun will move to Nanking, from which place all official business will be transacted.

The Associated Press is assured that it is not the intention of the reform leaders to urge decentralization, but on the contrary that a strong central government ultimately will be formed. The present government is practically a military dictatorship and there is every evidence that Dr. Sun is the most competent man available to head it.

Stirring Times For U. S.

Washington, Dec. 30.—Sweeping changes in the tariff will be proposed by the Democratic majority in the House as soon as it gets to work next month. The Republican administration have also big changes now in process of being framed up, based on reports from the so-called tariff commission. But the Democrats will not wait for the administration bills—they have the majority and they will go on their own lines. The leaders of the Democrats have decided on sweeping reductions in the direction of a revenue tariff as against a wing of that party, who want many of the main items in the present tariff placed on the free list. Within six weeks the whole United States will be in the greatest tariff ferment it has ever experienced.

On top of all this is the stirring movements now in evidence in either party over their respective presidential candidates. Woodrow Wilson, in all likelihood, against Lafolette, two modernites, as against the old-timers like Taft, or Roosevelt, or Harmon (a Democrat).

The most marvelous thing of the situation is the strength of progressive ideas. Any man in the limelight to-day is a revolutionary (say Taft as an example), compared to what he was eighteen months ago. Wilson is for referendum, for recall. The big interests are getting the shake-up of their lives.

Fire Chief Refuses Present.

Montreal, Dec. 30.—The members of the fire department are keenly excited over the action that Chief Tremblay has taken, to put an end to a move that had been made to present him with a purse. Over thirteen hundred dollars had actually been subscribed by the firemen, when the facts of the case became known to the chief and the affair was promptly nipped in the bud. It was ordered that every cent subscribed must be given back.

Several weeks ago the members of the fire department decided that as Chief Tremblay had worked so earnestly for the good of the force the entire force ought to show its appreciation by making him a valuable present.

The move was so popular that very soon over a thousand dollars was subscribed.

MANCHUS GIVE IN

Will Leave Question of Republic to National Convention

WILL NOT EFFECT A LOAN

Shanghai, Dec. 30.—The peace conference being held here between the representatives of the Pekin Government and the revolutionary party, at their meeting yesterday, agreed in the first place that the question of the form of government to be ultimately adopted for China should be discussed and decided by a national convention, whose decision should be binding on both parties.

In the second place, it was agreed that pending the decision of the national convention, the Manchu Government was neither to accept nor to attempt to obtain foreign loans.

In the third place, all Manchu troops in the Provinces of Shansi, Shensi, Hupeh, and Kiangsu shall evacuate their present positions and withdraw from them to a distance of 100 li (about 37 miles) within five days, beginning from Dec. 31.

The republican troops shall in the meantime neither advance nor occupy the places evacuated pending special arrangements to be reached by mutual agreement. The Manchu troops are not to advance nor to attack the positions at Shantung, already held by the republicans, nor shall the republican troops advance upon nor capture new places.

It is understood that the national convention to be called is to include those delegates at present in conference at Nanking, who have elected Dr. Sun Yat Sen president of the republic and others to be elected.

The Wily Tuan Fang.

Shanghai, Dec. 30.—Tang Shao Yi yesterday received a telegram from Pekin, saying that Tuan Fang, formerly director-general of the Hukwang Railroads and ex-viceroy of the Province of Chili, had arrived in the capital disguised as a coolie.

It was reported Dec. 18 that Tuan had been killed at Taochow, Province of Shansi, by his own soldiers, under dramatic circumstances. The telegram received by Tang relates that Tuan says he bribed his soldiers to announce publicly that they had murdered him. Instead, they killed a pig and exhibited their bloody swords to the populace, vowing that the stains upon them had been made by Tuan's blood. Meanwhile, Tuan, clothed in rags, made his escape.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen and Wu Ting Fang, the Minister of Foreign Affairs in the revolutionary government, entertained at dinner last night. Dr. Sun declares himself ready to accept the presidency of the Republic of China if the national convention confirms his selection.

Women's Votes Cheap.

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.—It cost the women of California 15.3 cents a vote to win their fight for equal suffrage at the recent state election, according to reports given out at the headquarters of the Southern California Political Equality League yesterday.

The men admit $2.30 a vote is cheap for campaigns conducted by them.

Reports submitted to the league show that $26,000 was spent in the California campaign. The report showed that no one connected with the women's campaign drew a salary of more than $75 a month.

Farmer Burned to Death.

Brockville, Dec. 30.—A. A. Chapman, a prominent farmer, aged about 40, residing ten miles from Brockville, in the Township of Elizabethtown, was burned to death yesterday morning while attempting to rescue a team of horses from his barns which caught fire by a spark from the chimney of an adjoining dwelling. It is supposed he was overcome by smoke. The charred body was found two hours later in the ruins. Chapman leaves a widow but no children. A coroner has gone from Brockville to conduct an inquest if necessary.

Rescued Forty Fishermen.

Prince Rupert, B.C., Dec. 30.—The halibut steamer Grant of Seattle went ashore off White Rock, Banks Island, and quickly sank, Tuesday night. Her crew of forty men took to the dories and were picked up by the Canadian fishing steamer Falcon from here. Owing to the rough weather, the Falcon did not report here until yesterday.

The Grant had 30,000 pounds of halibut on board at the time she sank.

Pedro Montero has formed a provisional government, the portfolios being distributed as follows: Minister of the Interior, Manuel Tama; Minister of Finance, Juan Borja; Minister of Foreign Affairs, Modesta Chavez Franco; Minister of Public Instruction, Alfonso Arnub; Minister of War and Navy, Francisco Martinez Aquirre.

Smuggled Razor Into Jail.

Brockville, Dec. 30.—James Cowan of Gananoque, after being liberated from the county jail here, where he served two months, was taken into custody again within a few hours. At the request of a prisoner named Doherty serving eighteen months, Jailer McDougall handed over to Cowan from his belongings, a razor which was found later in the possession of Doherty. Cowan is charged with passing the instrument through the gate of the jail wall while the prisoners were being exercised in the yard.

The magistrate committed Cowan for trial. Doherty hails from Montreal and is considered a dangerous character.

Nine deaths which occurred from yesterday morning up to midnight bring the total of victims at the Berlin (Germany) night shelter for the homeless, who were poisoned by eating tainted fish, up to 57. Some ninety persons still are ill.

Election Laws Bad.

Augusta, Me., Dec. 30.—A special session of the Maine Legislature to consider the liquor laws, re-district the state for Congress and revise the election laws, was announced last night in a proclamation issued by Governor F. W. Plaisted. The session is to begin March 20.

In the proclamation Governor Plaisted refers to the difficulty encountered in tabulating the vote at the last state election on the question of repealing the constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of liquor. The proclamation says: "Our laws relating to the conduct of elections, the making of returns to the governor and council, the tabulating of the such returns and the declaration of the result thereof, are uncertain in their meaning and inadequate in substance."

Halifax Hotel Burned.

Halifax, Dec. 30.—The King Edward Hotel, opposite the Intercolonial Railway station in this city, was totally destroyed by fire last night.

It was a very dangerous conflagration on account of a heavy northwest gale that swept over the city and carried great embers for half a mile over the roofs of buildings on Lockman street and the waterfront. The only outbreak of fire outside the hotel, however, was in a wooden house three hundred yards distant, but this was extinguished without much damage.

Sixty men from H.M.C.S. Niobe under Lieut. White, R.N., volunteered and gave effective assistance to the fire department. The building and furniture, owned by Wm. Wilson, valued at $65,000 were partially insured.

160,000 Weavers Out.

Manchester, Eng., Dec. 30.—Nothing has as yet been done by way of intervention to end the great cotton mill strike, which has thrown 160,000 weavers out of work and placed on half pay an equal number of spinners. Both sides to the dispute appear determined not to yield and the situation remains practically unchanged.

Joel and Sarah Riley, whose refusal to join the union caused the trouble, have been compelled to leave their home at Accrington on account of the hostile demonstrations against them. The locked out operatives so far are unconcerned over the strike and treat it as an agreeable extension of their Christmas holiday.

Dynamite Exploded Near Dundas.

Hamilton, Dec. 30.—The explosion of a large quantity of dynamite in a quarry close to Dundas about 10.30 o'clock last night, gave rise to a rumor that six workmen had been killed, but the report proved to be without foundation. TABRIZ IS TAKEN

Persian City Falls Into the Hands of Russian Troops

CASUALTIES ARE HEAVY

Tabris, Persia, Dec. 30—A nine days' siege of this city by the Russian troops, and the dispersal of the combatants belonging to the Constitutional Progressive Party (or Fidais). A large number of casualties were sustained by both sides, the Russians alone losing from 100 to 200 men, while the losses of the Fidais were very severe, although the number cannot be ascertained.

No casualties were suffered by the resident foreign population, but many individuals suffered from a lack of provisions, while they were closely confined to their homes during the prolonged street fighting.

The atrocities which are reported to have been committed by the troops on both sides are entirely unfounded, the mortality among the native noncombatants being far from large.

The Russians alone were the object of the operations of the Persians, who displayed no resentment whatever against any other foreigners.

A collision between a patrol of the Russian guard and the Persian constitutionalists in the street during the night of Dec. 20 was the beginning of the disturbances. Two Persians were shot dead in this affair, after which the population showed great resentment, and fighting became general throughout the city on the following morning.

The principal engagement during the siege occurred in the neighborhood of the Russian consulate around the citadel known as "The Ark," and at the Russian camp at Baghi Shemel.

The Persians fired on the Russian camp with small mountain artillery from the top of "The Ark." The Russian soldiers in the camp replied by shelling "The Ark" with shrapnel and driving the Persians from their position. One of the shells struck the American flag flying at the consulate, which is situated near "The Ark," and the staff fell with a crash on the roof, but no further damage was done.

On the following day there was desperate fighting in the streets, the rifle and maxim fire being continuous. On the same day the Persians made a night attack on the Russian camp to which the Russians at first did not reply, awaiting the closer approach of the assailants. Finally the Russian troops opened fire, repulsing the Persians with heavy loss.

The Russian positions, both in the camp and at the Russian consulate, were at that time evidently in a precarious state. All communication between the camp and the Russian consulate was completely cut off for several days.

The first detachment of Russian reinforcements from Julfa consisting of 800 men with four guns, arrived in the outskirts of the city on the night of Dec. 26. They had made a forced march of 46 hours from their camp at Julfa, eighty miles from Tabris. On the following morning without establishing previous communication with the Russian camp or consulate they shelled various quarters of the city indiscriminately, doing, however, little damage, but impressing the Persians with the hopelessness of continuing their resistance. The citadel after being shelled from the cap was evacuated by the Persians on the following day and the Russians troops occupied it, raising the Russian flag over "The Ark."

QUESTIONS ANSWERED —BY— J. W. BROWETT

Optometrist

Q. Why is it that glasses are worn so much more now than years ago?

A. Years ago the science of optics or correcting errors of sight was not understood as it is to-day; only old persons or those near-sighted wore Glasses. Now we correct with lenses all errors of sight.

Q. Why is it that cheap glasses do not give satisfaction?

A. Cheap glasses are so faulty in construction and are of such poor quality that they distort the vision and cause pain in the eyes. The optical glass used by us is brilliant, clear and perfect, insuring comfort and ease to the wearer.

Q. Can my headache be relieved with glasses?

A. A personal visit will be necessary. Let us talk it over.

MARJORY'S BET

A Short Story

BY JOS. R. REHAM
(Short Story.)

"Why should the Sperrys be different to other girls? Are they so pretty, so attractive, that you predict so surely that I shall fall in love with one?"

Marjory Sperry awoke with a start. She had fallen asleep behind the big boulder in the shade. Lulled by the music of the waves splashing on the warm sand, she had allowed her book to slip from her grasp, while consciousness slipped from her ken, until she was roused by the mention of her name in a frank, manly voice. Marjory waited eagerly for the rejoinder.

"You may scoff, Hanson, but every one falls in love with them. I dare bet you will add to the number within a month."

"Dan Kent," Marjory breathed: then debated as to whether she should reveal herself to the two who had halted beside the boulder.

"If I had any interest in it I would take your bet up," Phil Hanson said lazily; "but I have not. Must you go back, old chap? I will stay here and read; it is a nice cool spot."

Marjory heard Dan whistle to his dog and saunter away, heard the stranger make himself comfortable against the boulder, and laughed softly to herself in anticipation of his dismay should he discvover her presence. Not so softly but Phil heard her and sprang to his feet.

"I beg your pardon," he said, uncertainly, looking at the fair, dainty girl with admiring eyes.

"My name is Marjory Sperry," she said, enjoying the consternation in his face. "I am sorry to have disturbed you, but I was asleep behind that boulder until awakened by your voice speaking my name."

Phil Hanson stiffened imperceptibly, as though to guard himself from the charm of one of this trio, who attracted everyone. He would not fall a victim to her wiles, he decided, and Marjory laughed again.

"Excuse me, you must be Dan Ken's friend, Mr. Hanson, are you not?" she went on.

"Yes, my name is Hanson—Phil Hanson. Then you must have overheard my words concerning you. I hope you will not think me boorish. You had not heard the previous conversation; and, besides"—with meek courtesy—"I had not seen you then."

"You need not trouble," Marjory said calmly; "I can see you do not intend to change your mind. But you did not take Dan's bet, I would like to challenge you."

"You mean——"

"I bet you a pair of gloves to a box of cigars that you fall in love with one of us three before the month is out."

"Done," Phil laughed with her. "You are risking your cigars. I have travelled in many lands, and have yet to meet my ideal. I am afraid I am tough and time hardened, but you shall try, Miss Sperry."

"I shall not try," Marjory announced. "Personally, I am not interested in the affair. I act on behalf of my sisters—ahem! W will meet here a month to-day to the very hour, and you shall pay up. I might tell you my size in gloves is six and a quarter, and I will prefer long white kid, please. They will do for the wedding."

"Wedding? Any one I am likely to know?" Phil asked, with interest.

"My sister Betty's wedding. Oh, did I not tell you we are all engaged?" Marjory glanced up at him with charming, child-like frankness. "Betty is to be married shortly to John Sorrell. Connie is engaged to ever such a nice boy whom dad does not approve of. He is making his pile in Australia; then he will come back and dad will let Connie marry him, and they will be—so happy! My own engagement is not yet announced. You must not say anything about it, will you? So, you see, our bet deals simply with falling in love, without any danger of reciprocity or subsequent arrangements."

Did the sun shine less brightly for Phil when she ceased? He could hardly tell, it came with such suddenness. He had not imagined her caring for any one in that way; she looked such a child, such a lovely, impulsive child. Phil looked away across the serene blue sea to the horizon: then quickly at his companion.

"And to whom are you engaged?" he demanded. Marjory shook her head. "I must not tell you yet," she said. "It would not be right, when I promised; but you will see soon." This was comforting, and Phil ground his teeth.

"Will you come up and see dad?" Marjory asked, when they came to the steep hill path which led to her home. "He gave Dan a warm invitation for you; do come."

During the next few days Phil became a frequent visitor at the house on the cliff. The Sperrys were a hospitable family, and Phil was soon at home in their circle. Each was interesting in a different way, and Phil realized the force of Dan's prediction.

Betty was evidently wrapped up in the young man who monopolized her, but Connie proved a charming companion, and as Phil joined the tennis parties and other amusements he slipped into the way of escorting Constance. From afar he watched Marjory flirting in her wayward fashion with the man of her choice, Noel Dering, and bit his lip. There seemed a secret hostility between Phil and Marjory now. Phil could hardly explain it to himself, and only once did it assume definite shape. It was when he found her packing her hamper alone after a picnic tea.

"Let me help you," Phil entreated.

"Thanks, I can manage. Hadn't you better join the others, Mr. Hanson," Marjory said, with unmistakable hauteur. "Constance will be waiting for you."

Phil stared; then he saw Noel across a mossy slope, struggling with a refractory tea basket. He turned away without a word. The month was passing swiftly, and the challenge was never referred to. The day arrived, and he sat on the boulder. He felt the gloves securely in his pocket when the familiar figure came in sight.

Marjory walked slowly and answered his greeting with a faint smile. "Well, what about the bet" she said. "I have not brought the cigars. You see, I knew I had won."

"You know?" he queried passionately. "Have I hidden it so badly? I suppose I am a fool; I know now why you blame me so."

"Hardly blame you,' Marjory said quietly; "but was it wise to lose control of your feelings so completely? Yet believe me, I did not mean you to suffer."

"Don't," he said sharply. "After all, it was a bet and you won. Here are the gloves. I suppose there will never be any hope for me?" Marjory shook her head.

"I am sorry, although the word sounds inadequate," she said. "But there never will be." Philip straightened himself resolutely.

"Of course, I knew," he said, as brightly as he could. "You must not mind; I will get over it, I suppose. Other men have done, but it is hard."

Hard—yes, it was hard to see the graceful girl so near, so beautiful, with just a touch of sadness in her face—sadness for him—it was cruel. The thought of her belonging to another man tortured him. Too well he knew that she and she alone could fulfill his ideal.

Marjory sat on the boulder, and as her gloves slipped from her grasp, Phil mechanically picked them up. Their hands mat for a moment, and when Marjory drew hers back quickly, he paled and spoke bitterly.

"I suppose you think I'm dishonourable to have succumbed?"

"Not dishonourable—only natural," Marjory answered deliberately. Phil raised his hat and turned on his heel. He was striding along the shore when Constance's voice on the cliff above roused him from his reverie.

"Miss Marjory? Yes, she is along the sands opposite the point," he called back, in answer using his hands as a trumpet. "Will I tell her? Yes, if you like. Visitors? All right."

He retraced his steps with mingled feelings, but all thought of himself was forgotten when he found Marjory flung on the sands beside the boulder sobbing as though her heart would break. "What is it, Miss Sperry—Marjory? Tell me!" Phil knelt beside her, and put his arm round the slender figure. "Don't cry. Oh, don't; I can't bear that. I love you so. Oh, forgive me, but let me help you."

"You love me?" Marjory drew away from him, and looked steadily at him through her tears. "Then what about Constance?"

"Constance?" Philip repeated impatiently. "Good heavens, Marjory, you did not think I loved Constance, surely? You could not think that. Why, I lost my heart to you a month ago, and on this very spot. Then, when you told me there was no hope for me you did not mean——" His eyes glowed with a sudden tenderness. "Ah, but"—with a sharp remembrance—"there s still Noel Dering. You are not free."

Marjory raised her face. "If I told you he did not matter—" she began.

"What do you mean?"

"That we only arranged our engagement to please his uncle until I should meet the man I love"—shyly. "Then I was to break off, and Noel would not be to blame; otherwise, his uncle threatened to disinherit him."

"And have you met the man you love?"

Marjory was clasped in his arms, for already her eyes had answered him.

The Best Treatment for Itching Scalps and Falling Hair

To allay itching and irritation of the scalp, prevent dry, thin and falling hair, remove crusts, scales and dandruff, and promote the growth and beauty of the hair, the following special treatment is most effective, agreeable and economical. On retiring, comb the hair out straight all around, then begin at the side and make a parting, gently rubbing Cuticura ointment into the parting with a bit of soft flannel held over the end of the finger. Anoint additional partings about half an inch apart until the whole scalp has been treated, the purpose being to get the Cuticura ointment on the scalp skin rather than on the hair. It is well to place a light covering over the hair to protect the pillow from possible stain. The next morning, shampoo with Cuticura soap and hot water. Shampoo alone may be used as often as agreeable, but once or twice a month is generally sufficient for this special treatment for women's hair. Notwithstanding Cuticura soap and ointment are sold everywhere, those wishing to try this treatment may do so without expense by sending to "Cuticura," Dept. 4M, Boston, U. S. A., for a free sample of Cuticura soap and ointment, with 32-p. book on skin and hair.

Obliged to Quit Business

So Dreadful Was the Suffering From Itching Piles

After Twenty Years of Pile Torture Relief and Cure Came with

Dr. Chase's Ointment

You take no risk and you make no experiment when you use Dr. Chase's Ointment for piles. Many doctors still cling to the idea that nothing but an operation will effect a cure. But operations are expensive and dangerous and often fail in their results. Some have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment after operations had failed.

Dr. Chase's Ointment truly has a wonderful record as a cure. Here is a case which was reported recently:

Mr. John P. Marshall, 14 Barnes road, St. John's, Nfld., writes: "For upwards of twenty years I was troubled terribly with itching piles; at times so bad that I was obliged to lay up ,unable to attend to business.

"I tried many treatments without benefit, until II accidentally read of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and found at last a cure by using this ointment. I only used one box and part of a second one when I was completely cured, and have had no return of the piles. That was eighteen months ago, and, needless to say, I attribute this cure to Dr. Chase's Invaluable Ointment."

Many sufferers from piles have tried so many scores of treatments that they cannot believe that cure is possible. In order to convince the skeptical we are always willing to send a sample box free to anyone who encloses a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

A Happy New Year to every reader of this department.

FACING THE NEW YEAR

The clock strikes 12 on 31st December, and we are ushered into a New Year—with how many plans for the future—new resolves, many, alas! that are made to be broken. But let us welcome the untrodden paths and grasp the new conditions with a firm hand, grateful for the blessings the old year has brought to us.

How the years come and vanish! When the Christmas bells have ceased their ringing we stand facing the New Year which comes with noiseless pace out of the future and we wonder what it will bring us. We are certain of one thing, that in our hands is vested the power to make the year one of character growth—if the old year has brought to us failures with the New Year the tide may turn. Failure is sometimes the stepping stone to coming success. The past is gone but the present is left us in which to work. We must conquer difficulties an dnot let them conquer us, then what was considered a possibility may become a reality.

It takes what seems much like drudgery to od anything well. Let us during the new-born year take all the good that lies within our reach. The beauty and the glory of the world are close at hand, but some see nothing but clay. Let us hold fast to duty. This will be of value in the storm or in the sunshine. The most successful life is the one that has done the most for his fellow man. Happy then is the man who has that in his nature that acts on others as the April sun on violets.

We can wish no better thing for all our readers than that they begin the New Year animated by a firm resolve to turn all its experience into profit for themselves, mentally, morally, socially and materially, and then to faithfully carry out the resolution.

* * *

Happy New Year! What a blessed phrase! Speak it from the heart and then strive to make everyone's New Year a happy year and yours will be happy, indeed.

* * *

The days, weeks, and years slip away like water in a running stream. Time's great clock never loses a moment. Relentlessly, surely the moments pass, and our eager hands are not able to detain hem. We cannot keep back the flying years, but we can and should keep the blessings they bring. Hold fast to the lessons they have taught. Keep the memory of their joys. Enrich every day of life with the garnered wealth of the days behind.

CRUMB OF COMFORT

Year by year, for twenty centuries, the story of the night at Bethlehem has been told and retold. To-day no household in Christendom, in town or village or on distant prairie can plead the ignorance in which Bethlehem then lay. If the door is shut on the Christ-child to-day, it is not from lack of knowledge, but from churlishness or indifference.

All the old troublous questions of the origin and destination of the Galilee Carpenter have passed.

All the mediæval worriment in discriminating between human and divine has gone, all the puzzled inquiry into the miraculous. No longer is mankin dstirred over the non-essential. Theories of Him fade away, dogmas of his nature lose their charm. His gentleness has conquered. His influence continues and widens. Slowly brightening, the gleam that touched him spreads through he world. His spirit moves on the face of civilization and makes it kindlier every generation. The New Year of 1912 will find more living close to the Golden Rule than any year in the history of the world. This makes family life sweeter and ease the bitterness of failure and ignorance and all life's incompleteness. That wonder-working personality was never so potent as to-day—so insistent and tenderly sure. Under a thousand forms, creeds and names, men serve him.

New Year greetings are greetings of goodwill. How they soften hard hearts, purify base desires, sweeten bitter thoughts, and make every deed purer and holier; every wish kinder an dtenderer. Let hearts expand, sympathies enlarge, and goodwill reign. Let benediction drop from lips and substantial gifts fall from overflowing hands. Make chereless homes radiant, and hopeless hearts to thrill with unspeakable gladness. Forgive your enemies. Bury the past. Rise above the mean and petty resentments which you may have harboured against those who have not used you well. Be generous.

THE HAND AND DEVELOPEMENT OF LANGUAGE

There was a fad some twenty years ago among certain classes to make the children use both hands equally, with a view to developing ambidexterity. There were very few successful results; on the contrary, the children that used only one hand seemed to get along better in every way, especially in intellectual development. The explanation for this is found in the fact that the control of the hand is intimately connected wih the development of language; but the brain-centres that have to do with language are situated on the left side—that is; in connection with the centres that control the right arm and hand.

An examination of thousands of human skeletons showed that in every case in which the right arm had a greater development than the left arm there was a corresponding development on the left side of the skull. Left-handed persons would accordingly be expected to have less language ability, on the whole, than right-handed persons; and children that used both hands indifferently under compulsion would hinder still more the development of their ability in the use of language.

In the German Army Dr. Bardleben found 3.88 per cent. of left-handedness. This figure is to be considered as rather lower than the true ratio as many left-handed men deny or fail to report the fact. In north-eastern parts of Germany, left-handedness is less frequent than in the central parts. It is curious that among monkeys the arang-outang and the hylobates are left-handed, while the gorilla and the chimpanzee are left-handed.—Harper's Weekly.

We wish to call your attention to the fact that most infectious diseases such as whooping cough, diphtheria, and scarlet fever are contracted when the child has a cold. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy will quickly cure a cold and greatly lessen the danger of contracting these diseases. This remedy is famous for its cures of colds. It contains no opium or other narcotic and may be given to a child with implicit confidence. Sold by all dealers.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Mahogany can be given a good lustre by wiping off with a cloth wrung from cold water and rubbing to a high polish with a dry cloth. It should be rubbed at least half an hour.

A little borax and ammonia added to water for cleaning painted walls will greatly expedite the work. Wash a small part at a time and wipe it perfectly dry with a clean cloth.

Do not be tempted to experiment with every furniture polish. Never use anything on furniture that you do not know all about. Doing over ruined furniture is costly and varnish is easily hurt.

A grape basket for the clothespins with a wire hook fastened in the handle, will save much time when hanging out clothes, as it may be pushed along the line and will always be handy.

To keep a meal hot for a late comer fill a soup plate nearly full of hot water, place the dinner plate with its contents on top of the hot soup plate, and cover closely with still another plate.

It is a great protection from moths when putting clothes away to scatter over them dried wormwood, which may be procured from any druggist. Each article should be wrapped separately in a newspaper.

To keep a gas stove from rusting when it is not in use for the winter, first clean carefully with pumice, dry carefully, and then rub over with olive oil. It is best to do this while the stove is warm.

When carpets are not taken up they can be greatly freshened by washing with water in which a tablespoonful of ammonia has been added to a pail of water. This should be done after a thorough sweeping.

When wallpaper is to be cleaned with medicated putties or crusts of bread, the room should first be made free of dirt. Work only in one direction No paper will stand cleaning more than three times.

KIT'S COLUMN

(Copyrighted)

A pause in the dance—what is it they say,
With a careless laugh as they glide away,
Without a regret or a passing sigh?
"Good-bye, old year—good-bye, good-bye."

But your eyes are wet with the tear-drops bright;
And the music grows faint—you are tired to-night—
And weary of heart as you softly cry:
"Oh, little old year, good-bye, good-bye!"

So it is all over. You have had your Christmas presents and crunched your Christmas sweets. You have played Old Scrooge one way or the other, before his dream or after. You have given or you have withheld and are so much the better or the worse for it. The children have their toys and Santa Claus has gone back to his fastnesses to sleep awhile and meditate on his adventures and plan new surprises for next Christmas—in his fairy toy shop where the gnomes and the water sprites and genii and the tire elves labour to do his bidding. Christmas has passed and we are again at the parting of the years.

Long ago everything that anybody could, would or should say about the last moments of an old or first of a New Year has been said. Long ago we determined that never again would we write one word more about it, yet—like Mr. Feaziwig's calves twinkling and bobbing everywhere in the dance—here we are again! The solemnity of these last moments catches us by the heart, and even in the dance we pause to hear the calling of the bells—tolling an old year out, ringing a new year in.

I never hear them without feeling a loneliness of spirit stronger at the hour which parts the years than at any other. One feels like a little child standing on the threshold of dark room afraid to go on. We turn again and again to look behind where the lights are going out one by one. Brightly to the last burns the torch of memory. All the good, the joy the dying year brought us rushes back—all the sorrow, the griefs—diminish. He was a good old sort after all. We had got on friendly terms with him and now he is going fast. He is gone. De Mortuis nil nisi bonum. Let him go in peace, and extend as hearty a handshake to the stranger at the door as your timid heart will permit, for—"The king is dead!" Long live the king!"

What gifts carries he in his hands for us? We dare not ask. The blank year lies before us. Not one of us can guess what sorrows or pitfalls are waiting for him; not one can tell how far his feet may stray into the desolate wastes. We stand ready to face what will come, ready to walk a bit farther along the road with our new resolutions strapped to our shoulders. The way is long, and we shall get weary presently and throw our windy baggage from us, whence it was roll into some morass and sink out of sight. But we are the better for having made them. Poor resolutions! The worst among us hopes to do better. The drunkard resolves to quit his cups and live cleanly; the spendthrift to take a turn at economizing; the thief vows that he will lead a new life when he gets out into the world again. Even gentle Mater whose little sins are nearest of all to whiteness, makes very firm resolves about her mending basket. It shall be cleared out every week—"e-v-e-r-y week," she says with tight lips. And so we start again hopefully. It is only the condemned sitting in his cell listening to the bells that ring in his certain death who can be without hope in these last moments of the fading year. Poor wretch! Yet even for him a better may be dawning.

What good resolves we made this time last year, you and I. I turn to the little diary whose first pages are radiant with rosy resolutions. Whither have they all flown? Alas! into the limbo of dead things, poor, passionate resolutions, made with such fervour, such splendid faith in oneself—gone like a wind that drifting to sea is lost in the surge of great waters!

The new diary, the new resolves, the New Year is at hand. We say farewell to the old friend—

"He brought you smiles, he brought your tears,
And some burden of griefs and hopes and fears,
Shadow and sun—now so swift to die.
Weary Old Year,- good-bye, good bye!"

Nothing would do her but "a pink pussy wif a yellow tail," and I sat on the floor and upbraided Santa Claus long and bitterly because he hadn't such a thing in his shop—never heard of it—in fact. The old man bustled about among his wares and lost his slippers in his hurry. Cats and kittens of every other sort had he, Grey and striped and ruddy; black and white and even one Paddy green Irish cat with fight in her eye—"Paddy green's so fashionable," was the old man's excuse for this fresh "grievance of Ireland." All the week before Christmas I tramped the Two Towns—each as big as Arnold Bennett's Five—but no such cat was to be seen anywhere. And the Baby clamoured for it. A pink pussy wif a yellow tail. Can you imagine the beast? So, all failing, I bought a white cat with shoe button eyes and sat up most of one night (God forgive me, it was a Sunday night, too) painting him. He may not have been a work of art, for since there wasn't enough paint to go round, and no time to get any more, I had to patch his back with magenta, and give him purple paws, but he was a pink pussy wif a yellow tail to Baby, which was all that mattered, and the baby loved him. Isn't it a good thing that Wendy grew up and got married and had children of her own, and is there any Fool as glorious as an old Fool?

Have you experimented yet with paper bag cookery, and does it come up to your expectations? I confess to liking my steak brown, the fat bits crisp and on the edge of being burnt. Ours came out of its bag, tender and juicy, but very pale in the face, as if it had had a fright and hadn't got over it. As for the chicken, he burst his bag with a crack and would crow if he could. As it was, he lost all his gravy before we could slip him into another bag. He was "pale-complected," too, while the joint looked pasty. Only the fish came out sparkling and silver and looking fit. He was to juicy. We would have preferred him browned on a plank and rather dry. We ate him with frightful doubts as to his wholesomeness. The potatoes burst and rolled incontinently about the oven, and refused to get cooked and kept the rest waiting so long they got tired and cold. So we tied the balance of the cooking bags up neatly and set them upon the topmost shelf of the cupboard away out of the dust.

May they sleep in peace.

In order to show that she was not in the least superstitious, Miss Lily Elsie, London's prettiest Merry Widow, deliberately broke all the laws that govern what we are pleased to call good and bad lucks at her wedding the other day. She broke mirrors, walked under a ladder; tipped over all the salt cellars; wore thirteen buttons on her wedding gown, and had thirteen guests at her last maiden supper. All to prove that she was not superstitious. But—if she was not, why did she do this? The very fact that she broke every one of the time-honoured laws, proves that she must have believed in the existence of superstition. "I will defy Fate!" she cried, and departed on her honeymoon. And all her friends sat back and waited.

And they are waiting still.

Would you like to live to be a hundred? I was looking at two rows of centenarians the other day, a row of women and a row of men. The old women had terrible faces. Some looked wicked, some foolish, others murderous, all looked awful. If any of them ever had been beautiful they were now sorry instances of what Time can do to loveliness. It was a grim joke. If the face is the index of the character then each of these poor old women must have been a very wicked person indeed. There was not a touch of humour, or pathos in any face not the ghost of a shadow of comeliness. Life had battered all beauty out of them.

The old men looked better. Why? Because each showed just as little face as possible. The rest was covered with hair. This hid the mouth, which is the feature that first falls into ruin. We women have no such protection. The old men would have been even more frightful than these poor dames could we have seen them clean-shaven. A man past his youth is foolish to shave in the hope of making himself look younger. He only reveals his —wickedness. Were he wise he would leave it covered up. The man with the scythe spends most of his time carving his jokes on women's faces. I should not care to live to be a hundred, and am thankful there is no likelihood of such a thing. And yet everyone is demanding rules for longevity! The founder of the Longevity institute in Chicago—isn't that like Chicago?—gives those rules briefly. You must live all your life the minimum of everything save work. Clothes, food, shelter, the very least of these, especially of food. You may drink and smoke. Neither of these in moderation affect longevity. But you must eat less than you desire, and you must have fresh air. Simple, isn't it?

But it isn't much fun. No, I don't think I want to be a hundred and look like these old women.

The prophecies for 1912 are almost ready. Behind closed doors the prophets are busy making them. A few have leaked from the studio of Madame de Thebes. A terrible catastrophe is to occur in Paris about the middle of the year. A royal personage will die. There is to be an earthquake in England, floods in America, and a financial panic in Canada.

But is it not the same every year? We are promised flood and fire and shipwreck, death and ruin. As though these things do not happen every day, in one place or the other! Old Moore is out with cryptic mysticisms. Old Moore is always wisely ambiguous. He never commits himself to anything but "more trouble in Ireland. Outrages, land taxes, disturbances." Wonderful how keen his foresight! Old Moore, I used to buy you for a penny in Henry street, Dublin, when I was a little shaver and you were saying precisely the same thing then as now. But a greater has risen. "Ireland will have Home Rule," he says, "if the Orangemen don't prevent it." That fellow knows a thing or two.

In certain "wild" parts of Ireland a supper is laid out for the New Year. I never could make out whether the year was a lady or a "gintleman" from Betty—but it was some sort of a personage. It had to have cakes and ale and a pasty and a potato cake, and the kitchen door was left open all night for "it" to walk in. In the morning the feast was carefully cleared away and buried in some place where the pigs could not get at it, it being fairy food. The "fairy" table cloth was then folded and put away for a twelvemonth.

Charless Lamb had a delightful appreciation of New Year's festivities. "Of all sounds of all bells," he says, "the most solemn and touching is the peal which rings out the old year. I never hear it without a gathering up of my mind to a concentration of all the images that have been diffused over the past twelvemonth; all that I have done or suffered, performed or neglected, in that regretted time. I begin to know its worth as when a person dies. It takes a personal colour;" nor was it a poetical flight in a contemporary when he said;

"I saw the skirts of the departing year."

And talking of it now when the last hours are trembling away into the past, that was a nice remark I heard as I passed swiftly down the street in the dusk.

"I wish," said a man to his mate, as they stood idly on the curb, "that somebody would shoot somebody, or blow up a bank or the postoffice, or that a big fire would star just for amusement. I was never in a duller spot." Nice man. Nice sentiments to open a fresh year with.

And may I at the last wish all the patient, kindly, encouraging and sympathetic readers who have followed this column, a very bright New Year, filled with happiness and hope, and thank them for the much they have from time to time forgiven in the rambling talks of their old friend.

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Raised Me From the Grave"—Mrs. Taylor

This is a strong statement to make, but it is exactly what Mrs. Thomas Taylor, of Blum, Texas, said in expressing her opinion of this remedy.

"Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine raised me from the grave and I have much confidence in it. I can never say enough for your grand medicines. If anyone had offered me $10,000 for the second bottle of Nervine that I used I would have said 'no indeed.'"

MRS. THOMAS TAYLOR, Blum, Tex.

Nervous exhaustion is a common occurence of modern life. The wear and tear on the nervous system is greater now than at any time since the world began. For sleeplessness, poor appetite and that "run down" feeling, nothing is so good as

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

In putting shirtwaists or blouses into a drawer or shirtwaist box slip a sheet of tissue paper between them; the extra trouble is worth while, for the waists will keep fresher.

Water carriers, so called, are small metal-rimmed porcelain trays, provided with a raised rim to prevent the glass slipping off. They are carried by means of a handle which springs from the centre of the carrier.

Grapefruit knives which are not only curved, but provided with a serrated edge, are most practical.

Holders for game sets are provided with two arms so as to hold both the carver and fork. They are not unsightly, and are extremely practical.

Scratches on your shoes should be rubbed gently with a little vaseline before polishing them. The marks will scarcely be noticeable then, while it puts the leather into better condition.

If, after washing chamois, there seem to be harsh places, rub them steadily but gently through the hands, and soon they will quite disappear.

When making aprons, especially those to be used in doing housework, do not forget a large pocket. It will save many a step in dusting and picking up.

Watery custard is caused by cooking in an oven that is too hot. Set the custard in a pan of hot water and see that the water does not boil during the baking.

In putting down linoleum or oilcloth have strips of molding nailed on the edges next to the baseboard. This prevents dust from getting under and preserves the edges.

If you are doubtful about your cream keeping sweet, heat it to almost boiling, put in tightly corked glass bottles and set on the ice to cool. In this way it will not sour nearly so soon.

If your furniture has grown dull and streaked try rubbing up with a flannel dipped in equal parts of turpentine and coal oil. It polishes quickly and much more cheaply than expensive polishes.

After filling a rubber water bottle with hot water press the side of same before you screw on the cap. In so doing all the steam passes out and there will be no danger of the bottle ripping, no matter how hot the water.

Paper roller towels which are soft and absorbent may be used for the kitchen. They are 12 inches wide and perforated every 18 inches. They are placed on a wooden roller and can be burned after using.

TO CLEAN LACE CURTAINS.

After soaking all the black dust out of curtains, wash them in one-quarter pound of soft soap, two large tablespoonfuls of liquid ammonia to four pails of water, well rinsed and starched makes them thoroughly clean and clear.

To prevent cheese becoming moldy or dry, wrap it in a cloth damped with vinegar, and keep it in a covered dish.

Hot liquid may be poured with safety into any glass vessel by holding it up in the hand and not allowing it to rest on the table.

An apple kept in the cake box will keep moderate rich cake moist for a great length of time, if the apple be renewed when withered.

A little cedar powder sprinkled on the top of the kitchen stove, while cooking is going on, will prevent the smell of food spreading to other parts of the house.

TO DESTROY ANTS.

So many people are pestered at present with ants, and this is an excellent way of getting rid of them. Take a large sponge, wash it well, press it very dry; by so doing the small cells will be left open. Place it on the shelf where the ants are troublesome, sprinkle fine white sugar on the sponge, and your trap is made. Two or three times a day drop the sponge in a pail of boiling water, and you will slay them by thousands. Squeeze the sponge in the water to rid it of the pests. Set the trap again and you will soon be rid of them.

HOME MADE CANDY

Take a sheet of writing paper, make it the shape of a baking tin about an inch deep, pin the four corners securely so that it will hold water. Fill it about a third full of fine white sugar, cover the sugar with water and let it boil, but not too fast. Take off the scum which rises and when nearly done sprinkle over it the meats or nuts.

Soak the paper in a shallow dish of cold water for a few minutes. When the candy is hard unpin the corners, peel off the paper, and the candy will be in one piece.

MAPLE CANDY.

Three cupfuls of pure maple sugar boiled until the syrup will spin a thread when dropped from a spoon. Take from the fire and add a heaping tablespoonful of butter, then beat, stirring in half a pound of marshmallows and one pound of shelled English walnuts broken into small pieces, until the candy begins to harden. Turn out into buttered pans.

CHOCOLATE CREAMS.

Melt unsweetened chocolate in a cup over boiling water, add an equal quantity of fondant, melt together, flavour with vanila, and if thick add one or two teaspoonfuls of hot water. Dip in this any flavoured centres.

PEANUT WAFERS.

Chop roasted peanuts very fine, pour in melted chocolate and then drop in wafers on oil paper. Make a hollow in each wafer by pressing a thumb in it when partially cool. Fill the hollow with chopped dates, dust lightly with powdered sugar and wrap in separate. Twist the ends and fringe like kindlers.

WHERE HE TURNED BACK.

George W. Perkins, who is withdrawing all further from business in order to give still more of his time to economic problems, said of a certain Socialist, a recent interview in New York:

"I grant you that he is intelligent. He knows, you see, that Socialism won't come in his time. If he thought there was any danger that it would he'd turn with his intelligence, conservative."

Mr. Perkins smiled.

"He reminds me," he continued, "of a chap at a western camp. This chap sat looking before the camp fire at bedtime and after a while he said quietly:

"'This mornin' at day break I struck the trail of a grizzly. I followed it till after 4 this afternoon. Then I came on back to camp.'

"'But didn't you keep on after the grizzly?' a man asked.

"'Wall, I tell the truth,' was the reply, 'the trail seemed to be gettin' altogether too fresh.'"—Los Angeles Times.

AT A DISADVANTAGE.

Professor Brander Matthews, at a literary dinner in New York, said of a certain "best seller":

"Its grammar is rather off. Its author listened to the rebuke meted out to a Philadelphia author in the early days of the last century.

"This author had been slashed in a review, and wrote to the reviewer and challenged him to a duel.

"But the critic wrote back:

THE CHAMPION of the FLEET

An Adventure of Peter Crewe—"The Man with the Camera Eyes."

By Harold Carter.

(Copyright, 1911, by W. G. Chapman, in the United States and Great Britain.)

In spite of an acquaintance which had lasted several months, I had never known that Peter Crewe was an Englishman. His accent was of that indeterminate character common to the educated class of both America and England, and I had learned very little about his antecedents, since he appeared to be wholly absorbed in his hobby of unraveling mysteries through the medium of his peculiar optical gift. That he had any interests outside this line of occupation was borne in upon me for the first time when going to his office to consult him relative to a client of mine, I found him reading a morning newspaper and giving vent to short and emphatic ejaculations.

"Did you see this?" he exclaimed. "The American fleet's middleweight champion is to box our middleweight champion at Coney Island tomorrow evening at eight."

"Our champion?" I exclaimed.

"The champion of the visiting British fleet," Crewe explained; and then I learned his nationality for the first time.

"Are you interested in boxing?" I asked in some surprise.

"I was a pupil of John L. Sullivan," he answered proudly.

It developed that Crewe had been widely known at one time as a successful amateur boxer, and was still held in respect as a man of parts and a stickler for all the best traditions of the ring.

"It is strange that you should have brought up this subject," I said, "because it is about this very man, Thompson, the American middleweight, that I have come to consult you."

"What is the trouble?" asked Crewe, laying his newspaper aside.

"I have an appointment with him at three," I answered. "Suppose you come over to my office and let him tell you his own story."

Crewe agreed, and, promptly at the hour set, Thompson made his appearance. He was a handsome, well-set-up fellow, a seaman from the "North Dakota," and a man of evident intelligence.

"Sit down, Thompson," I said. Thompson complied, laying down his head-covering upon the table. "Now," I said, "tell your story in detail."

"Well, it's this way, Mr. Langton," said Thompson, pulling up his trouser legs. "Next week I shall be twenty-one, and if I live to reach my majority I inherit a snug little sum of fifty thousand dollars from the estate of my uncle in Ireland. If I don't live that long it goes to a distant connection of my uncle known as Philip Egan. It wasn't willed that way exactly, but there was a court case, and the lawyers fixed it that way between them after eating up half the estate in litigation; the sum left was nearly a hundred thousand."

"And you have experienced some remarkable things during the past few days," I continued.

"Yes, sir, as I told you this morning. We came ashore last week after a year's cruise, during which I hardly ever left the ship. Phil Egan was one of the first men I met on landing. He came up to me and shook hands. 'Frank,' he said, 'of course I hoped you wouldn't live long enough to get that money, but we're not going to let a little thing like that stand between friends, are we?' And though I've always mistrusted Phil, what could I do but give him the glad grip? So we saw the sights of the town together.

"Now, sir, that was five days ago, and of course I've been careful of myself, being in training and having every hope of whipping the Britisher at the island tomorrow. And yet, it has seemed to me that my life wasn't in particularly good standing.

"That same night, while Phil and I were strolling down the Bowery, perfectly sober, we were attacked by a gang without a moment's warning. Phil got away; I knocked down two of them, and the third nearly got home with his knife on me." He pulled down his sailor's collar and displayed a faint red scratch, almost encircling the throat.

"That would have been a bad wound if it had gone an inch deeper, Mr. Langton," he remarked philosophically. "And the day before yesterday, when I was passing down a side street, I heard a snap at my side and a crack at a window opposite. I looked, and in the woodwork of a door behind me I found this, just embedded."

He took from his kerchief a .45 caliber bullet.

"You suspect Egan is trying to murder you for the sake of the money?" I asked.

"It wouldn't become me to say that, sir," replied Thompson, "although I haven't seen him since we were set upon by the gang. But if he's going to get me, he'll have to do it quickly, for I come of age on Saturday."

"Did you go anywhere else with Egan?" Crewe asked.

"We took a turn round Coney Island, a couple hours before we were attacked on the Bowery, sir," Crewe answered.

"Now think. Did you do anything unusual at Coney?"

"Why, yes, sir," answered Thompson, reddening, "but it seems such a trifle, hardly worth mentioning."

"Never mind; out with it."

"Well, the fact is, I got tattooed by a Chinaman," said Thompson. "I'd always wanted to be done, and yet somehow I'd been a little shy; but Egan persuaded me and I had an eagle put on my chest, very artistically, too."

"Let me see it," said Crewe.

Thompson stripped, and a moment later we perceived the outlines of our national bird upon the sailor's chest.

"It's hardly sore at all," said Thompson. "That's the Chink's secret; it don't make you sore like most tattooing."

"And Egan persuaded you to have that done," said Crewe thoughtfully. "Now, have you a photograph of this man Egan?"

"Yes, sir, I brought it with me at Mr. Langton's instructions," said the sailor. "We were took together at Coney—twenty-five cents, and a very creditable piece of work."

Crewe took the photograph in his hand and focussed his eyes upon it.

"Hm! These cheap photographs have one advantage over the expensive ones," he said. They are truer to life; the photographers don't go in for retouching. Thank you, my friend," he said, returning it. "Now, let me give you one piece of advice. Go back to your ship and stay aboard her and don't leave until you come of age."

"But the fight's tomorrow," said Thompson helplessly.

"Cut it out."

"Why, sir, if I say it myself, I'm the only man in the fleet can whip the Britisher. They've been bragging how they're going to put it all over us."

"If you take part in that fight your chances of inheriting that money will be remote. Cut it out, Thompson, and, whatever you do, wear a pad of soft cotton batting over that tattoo mark."

The sailor rose with an expression of offended dignity.

"If that's all you can advise me, gentlemen," he said, "I must say my visit here hasn't done me much good."

"It has saved you a lot of harm, young man," said Crewe. "At least you have had your warning. You don't intend to obey my suggestions, I suppose?"

"No, sir,' answered the sailor doggedly.

"Then that is all I have to say to you. No, Mr. Langdon doesn't want to add anything. Good afternoon to you." And he showed him out of the door.

"I must say, Crewe," I began, "you have a rather unceremonious manner of dismissing my clients."

"Forgive me, Langton," said Crewe, all penitence in a moment, "but really I saw so much further ahead than you. I have reason to believe that a diabolical scheme has been put into execution which will result in the young man's death at the fight. Tell me, did you draw any deductions from the appearance or facts of the tattooing?"

"It looked a little bluer than the average tattoo mark," I said.

"Excellent. Then you are beginning to observe," said Crewe. "But still, even if you could see all, that would help you little, without a knowledge of that man Egan."

"You have seen him before?" I asked.

"Several times. In the month of July, 1907, I saw him in the Central Criminal court, during the trial of three Chinese gun-men, when I happened in with a communication for the district attorney. I was at that time practising law. The gun men were acquitted. A month later, while conducting a party of ladies over Chinatown I saw him seated at a table with two of the same men, eating with chopsticks. In fact, Egan is one of that small but influential class of whites that makes itself useful to the Chinese criminal and is parasitical to him."

"Now I see your point," I exclaimed. "The tattooing substance was of a poisonous nature, and—"

"In such a case I should hardly have permitted our friend to depart."

"But you surely do not suggest that the English champion has been bribed to injure him?"

"No," said Crewe, smiling. "Still, at all hazards Thompson must not be allowed to participate in the boxing affray at Coney Island tomorrow. By the way, you do not know Chinese, I suppose?"

"No."

"I often wish I did. With my power of visual retention, I am able to reproduce practically every sign of the ten thousand commonly used in the Chinese written language. But unfortunately my memory is rather subnormal than extraordinary, and I am never able to recollect what any of these signs mean. However, we have a little work to do in Chinatown."

We took the Third avenue elevated to that swarming region, walked up Mott street, and halted before an obscure, dingy-looking shop, in whose doorway stood a wide-hatted, felt-shoed Celestial.

"This," said Crewe, "is the headquarters of the Hip Sings, by which clan the gun men I referred to were employed. What do you see in the window?"

I saw a miscellaneous assortment of firecrackers, preserves, vegetables, lacquer work, wood carvings and kimonos.

"Now which of those Chinese labels should you say meant firecrackers, Langton?" asked my companion.

"That one," I answered. "It is placed above those bunches of rockets."

"I think so too. Now fix that sign in your mind. Our next objective is Coney Island."

It was evening before we arrived, and the shows were in full swing. For miles the great white way stretched out before our eyes, glittering with electric lights, a veritable fairyland of fantasy. Half New York seemed to have turned out to greet us, and all the sailors of both fleets, who were fraternizing and spending their shore money at the alluring side-shows. The whir of the scenic railroads, the shouts and laughter, the popping at rifle booths made up that perfect pandemonium of sounds that can hardly be heard anywhere but at this national pleasure city.

"Now, Langton, we have to find our Chinaman," said Crewe. "I am afraid that it is rather like searching for a needle in the proverbial haystack. Keep a sharp lookout for a Chinese tattooer, and we will take in each alley in rotation."

We traversed Coney Island and its purlieus for an hour and more without success. The booths, closely packed together, almost defied examination. One came upon them unexpectedly in corners, one stumbled round alleys upon the same streets that one had just quitted; our chance of singling out this particular booth seemed almost impossibly remote. Suddenly Crewe gripped my arm.

"You know that man?" he asked, pointing to a flashily dressed fellow who slunk along, with a peculiarly sinister gait, in front of us.

"No," I replied.

"That's Egan," he answered. "Disguised, but he could not take out that wrinkle above the eyebrow. Now follow him."

We followed him for five minutes or more; then he turned aside abruptly and came to a halt in front of a Japanese rice-sake booth, in a corner of which we now perceived a savage-looking Mongolian seated apparently aimlessly, staring out upon the crowds. At either side was a small stock of Chinese goods, which, however, he was making no attempt to sell.

"You recognize the firecracker symbol?" asked Crewe.

I did not recognize it and should never have remembered those apparently meaningless hieroglyphics. Crewe, however, seemed to be in high spirits.

"Now a great deal hinges upon one thing," he said. "It is my belief that Thompson did not tell us his whole story. In other words, I believe that he has been induced to return for a final treatment either tonight or tomorrow."

"Surely not immediately before the fight," I suggested.

"Sailors have no common sense about themselves. Ten to one he will be here. The only thing to do is to wait for him."

There was a conveniently secluded place across the alley. Since neither of us was known to Egan, it was arranged that we should take our seats within this beer garden and remain there, ordering drinks at intervals in as great quantity as might be necessary to prevent our ejection by the management.

"Langton," said Crewe, when we were seated with our full glasses before us, "I am more than ever confirmed in my belief that a most ingenious and diabolical plot has been hatched for that young seaman's death, and that in return for services rendered him Egan that Chinese criminal has consented to co-operate with him. The sight of the fire crackers has confirmed me in this belief. And if Thompson meets the English champion his death will be a foregone conclusion."

"But could they not encompass his death without such a meeting?" I asked.

"They could, undoubtedly. A fistic encounter between Egan or some hired bully and Thompson would have the same result, so far as Thompson is concerned. But there would be two drawbacks to such a plan. In the first place, the survivor would probably be arrested and have to stand his trial for manslaughter. In the second place, the encounter would not be without danger to the life of the other party. Whereas by making the Englishman the innocent participant in the murder, all danger is removed so far as concerns the conspirators."

I was more piqued than ever, but I knew that it was not Crewe's custom to explain his theories until the denouement. I revolved a dozen ideas in my mind. Could the Chinaman have injected some subtle poison which would be set in action only in the stress of a fistic encounter? My speculations were cut short by my perceiving Egan prepare to move away. In his farewell of the gun man there appeared to be a glance of perfect understanding.

"Follow him, Langton," whispered Crewe. "It is not essential that we know where he is going, but it is desirable in case more mischief is brewing. Do not be more than fifteen minutes, though, in any event."

I went in pursuit of Egan, who moved off furtively through the crowds. He made his way in the direction of the American camp, where the sailors of the English fleet were being regaled at a clambake by their American comrades. The affair was practically over; as I approached the canvas tent which had been set up I perceived a hilarious crowd, composed of the crews of both nations, streaming out arm in arm, laughing and chattering together. Egan made his way toward a large gathering of men which seemed to form the nucleus of the mob.

Suddenly the crowd opened and I perceived Thompson struggling in the arms of a dozen sturdy compatriots, who, elated with the festive meal, insisted, apparently, in carrying him in state down the main avenue of Coney. He regained his feet at last and stood in their midst, flushed and a little unsteady. I was astonished to see that he had evidently been drinking, in spite of his training. At the same moment he perceived Egan.

"Hello, Phil," he shouted, and shook the man by the hand warmly; then flung his arms around him. It was evident that prudence was no part of the sailor's nature. I reasoned that, angered by the unsatisfactory result of his interview with Crewe and myself that morning, he had experienced an entire revulsion of feeling. Doubtless Egan was now, to him, his best friend, and we were maligners and conspirators against his much-wronged relative. I wondered how much he would tell Egan; whether he would put him upon his guard.

The pair sauntered slowly along the avenue, despite the efforts of a fiery little man, apparently Thompson's trainer, who made wild endeavors to head him toward the elevated railroad. Thompson shook off the little man as though he were a fly, while his companions, evidently secure in their belief of the sailor's ability to dispose of the Englishman, trained or untrained, warmly seconded their mate. The little man gave up at last and, after shaking his fist angrily in Thompson's face, disappeared among the crowds.

Thereupon Thompson and Egan, arm in arm, surrounded by a round dozen of their cronies, strolled slowly in the direction of the tattooer's booth.

I hastened after them, and, by making a detour, succeeded in getting ahead of them at the next block and in reaching the booth a couple of minutes ahead of the party. I hurried across the alley to where I had left Crewe at the beer garden table.

Where was Crewe? Could that be he, that rough looking man, collarless, with dirty reversible cuffs and open waistcoat, his face flushed with drink, who was inviting all and sundry to come and sit down and drink at his expense? Undoubtedly it was Crewe, on closer inspection, for I had seen him in that same disguise upon a previous occasion; but I was certain that the sailor would never recognize him for the immaculate counsellor of the afternoon.

Crewe was acting his part to the life. To the keenest observer he would have appeared nothing more than some flash bully who, having pulled off a haul somehow, was spending it in the only way he knew and acting the "good fellow" to his improvised cronies.

He fell back and looked down at his hands stupidly.

"Here! Garcon!—Waiter!" he yelled. "bring us a quart bottle of fizzy drink. And say, you see that the ice's cold, or I'll knock your block off." And he flung down a fifty dollar bill upon the beer-soaked table, which the waiter ran to seize with avidity.

As I lingered near, Crewe's sharp eye was turned on me.

"Come here, bo," he yelled. "Have a drink. Gemmen, a friend. My friend—gemmen," he added in introduction; and, rather disgusted with the part we were to play, I sat down at an adjoining table, which was already filled with Crewe's strange guests.

None of them addressed me, however, being all apparently bent upon the possibility of extracting some money from Crewe, perhaps of sticking by him and robbing him after the rest had departed.

Then the uproarious crowd of sailors turned into the alley and lined up in front of the booth. I heard Egan's voice ring out, apparently to smother some protest.

"Shut your face," he yelled to the objector. "Let him be vaccinated if he wants to be. Show 'em your chest, Frank. Look, boys. Ain't that the finest eagle you've ever seen! That's the Yankee eagle," he continued, 'and I don't want anybody to tell me that Frank can't beat the Britisher with that eagle on his chest. If anybody tells me so," he continued, looking around, "let him step up and say so, and, I'll smash his face in."

Either nobody disagreed with the speaker's views, or else each of the sailors felt that his face would be more suitable if it were not smashed in. With a look of triumph Egan turned to the tattooer and pushed Thompson into a chair. The Chinaman took out his needles and pigments and began his work.

There is some psychological moment when the noisiest crowd becomes momentarily silent. At such a time the voice of some individual will arise and dominate the mob. So, at this juncture, the drunken tones of Crewe came floating across the still air:

"To hell with the American eagle!"

A dozen sailors sprang round, glaring. "What's that? What's that?" they cried. "Who said that?"

"I said that," shouted Crewe, rising and swaggering unsteadily toward them. "To—hell with the American eagle," he repeated with drunken gravity. "There's no Yank living but a little Canadian can knock the five-spot off every time."

There was a rush in Crewe's direction. In an instant he was surrounded by a mob of excited seamen, while his new friends made themselves scarce, evidently unwilling to share his unpopularity, yet not wholly absenting themselves, in case of further profits to come.

"You'll take that back," shouted a brawny sailorman, shaking his fist under Crewe's nose. "You'll eat them words or I'll make squash pie outen you."

"You will, will you?" replied Crewe sneeringly. "Twelve to one—twelve Yanks to one Canadian, and that's about your measure. There ain't a man here I can't lick singly in fair fight."

Crewe had forced his way to Thompson's side. The sailor had just been released from the tattooer's charge and was rearranging his clothes. Now, hearing these words, he sprang up glaring.

"Let me get at him," he shouted.

"No, no, Frank don't fight. You got to save your hands for tomorrow, Frank," cried his supporters.

"Let him fight," shouted Egan. "What's the odds. It won't take many seconds to put that slob out of business. Say, do you mean what you said?" he yelled, thrusting his face within an inch of Crewe's.

"I surely do, and here's to prove it," Crewe answered, and his fist shot out and caught Egan on the point of the jaw. I saw the man collapse, crumple up, and lie still. It was one of the cleanest fighting blows I had ever seen delivered.

Infuriated by the defeat of his friend, Thompson darted forward, his fists whirling like engine shafts. There was nothing of science shown. Crewe fought pluckily, but it was evident that he could not stand for long before those sledge-hammer blows. He sprang forward and the men clinched. I heard a short, quick snap, and heard the sailor utter an exclamation of pain. He fell back and looked down at his hands stupidly. One dangled limply from the wrist, as though it were broken.

With a yell the whole mob rushed upon Crewe. In an instant a free fight was in progress. Benches were torn up, tables seized; and, while the uproar was at its heighest, each man vainly struggling to get at the supposed Canadian, Crewe calmly slipped away, just in time to escape the attentions of a body of police, who came charging with drawn clubs.

"It was a foul blow, Langton," said Crewe to me on the following day. "But unquestionably it was justified for the saving of the man's life. By the way, I see that the Englishman easily defeated Thompson's substitute."

"What was the substance used by the tattooer?" I asked, knowing that Crewe's story would have to be drawn out of him piecemeal.

"One of the iodides," he answered, "and the most powerful explosives known. So violent are they in their action that, if a few grains be strewn upon the face of a watch, the hands, coming in contact with them, will detonate them and blow the whole watch to pieces."

"How did you come to suspect that this substance had been used, and how was it intended to work?"

"Do you remember what they used to rub into soldiers' wounds in olden days, Langton?" my companion asked.

I shook my head.

"Gunpowder. The explosives have the property of being very well tolerated by the tissues of the human body. Thompson's statement that the tattooing caused barely any irritation, the peculiarly blue appearance of the scar, and the relationship existing between Egan and the Chinaman, who was connected with a firm of firecracker importers, all confirmed me in my suspicion. The plan was, undoubtedly, to let Thompson meet the Englishman, when the first hard blow that he received upon the chest would certainly have detonated the explosive and blown out the vital organs of the body, producing instant death.

"You know that, when a foreign substance enters the tissues, nature, unable to reject it, renders it harmless by encysting it. It was the fear that this encysting process might already have begun which caused Egan to insist upon a second application.

"If the substance could have been removed, I would have confided in Thompson. But any attempt to cut out the explosive would have caused an immediate detonation. My problem, therefore, was to prevent the fight by rendering Thompson powerless without striking him upon the chest, as Egan hoped I would when he incited him to attack me. And but for that," concluded Crewe, with a touch of pride in his tones, "I think I could have given a better account of myself in our little tussle."

"I suppose there is no chance of bringing the criminals to justice," I suggested. "Thompson would be the first to take the part of Egan. At least he ought to know the truth."

"What for?" asked Crewe. "He will be well protected in the ship's hospital, the explosive will have become encysted with a few days, and Thompson will certainly inherit that legacy. Langton, he said, looking at me whimsically, 'you, as a lawyer, ought to know that the wise man is he who knows when to keep his mouth shut.'"

INFLUENCE OF WEST POINT

Cadet at Home Visit Surprises Young Brother and Teaches Him Good Lesson.

When Bob, our gallant West Point cadet, came home for his long furlough, he slept with 13-year-old Dick. In the morning he thoroughly shocked Master Lazybones by stripping the clothes from the bed and putting the room in good order before he came down to breakfast. Dick's eyes were rounder than ever when Bob explained that every cadet was required to keep his room and clothes in immaculate condition. Before the end of Bob's furlough the boys had turned the cosy little room into a bare apartment which Dick cared for with great pride.

The wholesome discipline and results of the West Point training seem to us to offer valuable lessons to American parents and teachers.

Shortly after Bob's visit the question of extra spending money worked itself out in a very satisfactory way. Dick often teased for things that were beyond the limits of his moderate allowance. He is now able to add to his income by working around the house and grounds. Each hour of conscientious effort adds six cents to his allowance. Consequently he is eager to wash dishes, sweep, weed, paint, wash windows, and do many other things that he formerly regarded as particularly obnoxious.

His parents and friends have noticed with amusement that the money he has earned is spent with much greater discrimination than that which is given to him.—Harper's Bazar.

Ugly Duckling Child's Favorite.

"It is the plain, simple doll or toy which brings a child out and, in a sense, educates him," says Sir Lauder in the London Daily Mirror.

"Take the case of the little girl and her family of dolls. There are dolls of all kinds, but the one which is loved most by the child is the plain, painted wooden doll with no attractions to speak of. The other dolls may be remarkably lifelike and pretty, but it is this ugly duckling which stimulates her imagination. With boys the plain ball, in my opinion, is the one of the most valuable playthings. Marbles, too, is an excellent game for children.

"We have paintings on record, which are about 3,500 years old, of Egyptians playing at ball. Throughout history the ball has been conspicuous as a plaything. I certainly advocate the simple doll or toy which leaves something to the imagination for young children."

Find Mink Furs for Prize Dog.

It isn't every dog that can boast of false hair and wear two sets of fur brazenly, just as though it didn't care who knew that one of them was not its own hair. But even the grammar will grudgingly admit that there are exceptions to all rules. This time the exception is Osage Lady Jane, owned, controlled and fed by J. P. Lane, and

The coat with which Lady Jane will be stepping about in in a few days is made of mink and will cost $250. The coat is striped with dark and light mink and has 14 dangling tails. Considering the past records of Lady Jane Mr. Lane doesn't think he is doing too much for the dog.

"She wins in about every show I have exhibited her," Lane said. "She'll be a dazzler in that outfit. It's a shame to hide her natural color and charms with those mink skins, but you know the mink there for business."

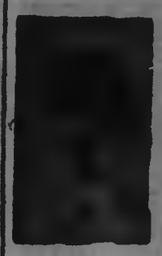
THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

IT is written of Robert Louis Stevenson, that on seeing a dog mistreated, he at once interposed, and when the owner resented his interference and told him, "It's not your dog," he cried out, "It's God's dog, and I'm here to protect it."

I have been wondering to-day if we—that is, you and I, and all the other women who cannot bear that there be unnecessary suffering in the world, even among the dumb brutes—cannot do something to protect Gods delivery horses.

As I sat at my window this morning, I saw at least half a dozen delivery wagons of various kinds go by at a rattling pace—sometimes a fast trot, sometimes, a pathetically feeble gallop. Two or three stopped within my line of vision and I watched the horses stand panting, and sometimes even trembling and shaking, while the boy went into the house, and saw them lashed into a gallop again as soon as the boy had clambered back into his seat.



Two or three of the horses were very old. One was a light carriage horse that should never have been put into a heavy delivery team at all. Now all delivery horses have a hard enough time with their long rounds and cold stops, even if they are allowed to go at a reasonable pace, but perpetual hurry breaks down a horse even more quickly than it does a man and it was evident that these poor hounded animals were suffering cruelly from the continual strain.

Now, surely if you are enough interested in animals to notice them at all you must have seen similar conditions.

You admit it, but you don't see any possible way you could help prevent such conditions?

I am not so sure of that.

I can think of one simple way at once. Some of these boys were driving their horses at such a wicked speed, because they enjoyed it, or because they weren't given time enough to cover their round at a reasonable pace. But some of them were rushing because they had to fill some hurry order. Madame had forgotten to give her order until just before lunch, and had urged the grocer when she finally did telephone him to "send it up just as quick as possible, please." And it was to nullify the effects of her forgetfulness that some poor tired horse was forced into a gallop.

That's one self-evident way you can take care of God's delivery horses, isn't it—by sending in your order at the proper time and if you forget, taking the consequences of yourown forgetfulness and not asking some poor animal to suffer.

And here's another way. Can't you speak to the boy who delivers your groceries, if you see him overdriving your horse? Tell him you don't want your groceries brought you by ill-treated animals. Tell him you spoke to him first to give him a fair chance, but if he doesn't do better, you'll speak to his employer.

A great many times I think the employer would be more indignant than anybody if he knew how his horses were treated, for good horses are expensive things and he can't afford to have them wastefully used.

But when you suspect that the fault lies with the employer's shortsightedness and cruelty, can't you have the courage to speak directly to him and even use the loss of your trade as a club to club a little decency and humanity into him?

You think he would say that the horses were his, and that you were interfering in what was none of your business? I'm afraid you're almost sure to make to that.

Perhaps so. But surely you'd know it was worth while to try.

ANXIOUS PRISONERS

LYONS, DEC. 28.—There are two mighty anxious prisoners in the Wayne County Jail. One of them is Rosario Sergi, who will be tried for murder, first degree; the other is Santo De Carlo, who was convicted of murder, second degree, and will be sentenced this afternoon. Both men had a chance to plead guilty to murder, second degree, and both declined.

In the opinion of the Wayne County authorities, De Carlo did all the shooting and killed Pietro De Santes and his son, Guiseppe de Santes, the two Northern Central bridgewatchmen, in their lonely shanty between Newark and Fairville on the night of October 22. Just what occurred in that cabin that night will never be revealed in court unless Sergi confesses. There are two versions of the homicide, both given by Pietro De Santes, the murdered father.

The first version was given a few minutes after the bloody tragedy by the mortally wounded father, as he was being rushed to Newark on a light engine. He said Santo De Carlo did all the shooting and had two guns, while Sergi had a gun and a stiletto and did no shooting. A few hours later in Newark, when Sergi was brought before him with his head all bandaged up, the father exclaimed, "You kill my boy. When Sergi replied "I was afraid he shoot me," the father replied, "You lie. You killed my boy."

Between 3.35 and 3.48, the following morning in the General Hospital in Rochester, the dying father in his statement said he was shot first; that they had no revolver of their own in the cabin; that Sergi had a revolver and a stiletto. He said the two men were there an hour visiting, then they started to rob the father and son and to shoot. Asked by the District Attorney if the two men after killing his son and mortally wounding him, started to rob the shanty, the father answered, "Yes." The next question, "What did they do?" was not answered. Pietro De Santes was dead.

As a matter of fact, either Pietro De Santes was confused or did not understand all the questions. He said he and his son had no gun in the shanty. They did have one, and the [illegible] days before while handling it. His hand was still in a sling. He said the man who shot him and did the shooting stood by the door.

In reality, Sergi had only a stiletto when he arrived at the shanty, while De Carlo had two revolvers, one of 32 and one of 38-caliber. After visiting an hour with the two bridge watchmen, Sergi attempted to rob Guiseppe De Santes, the son. The latter reached for and secured his own revolver. Pietro De Santes went to the assistance of his son. De Carlo shot the old man several times with the 32-caliber revolver. Sergi wrested the revolver away from Guiseppe. The latter then came at Sergi with the hand ax, cutting him badly about the head.

At this De Carlo exhausted his 32-caliber revolver and opened fire with his 38 at short range, killing Guiseppe instantly and mortally injuring Pietro. Just as the two murderers were about to ransack the cabin, the whistle of the south-bound freight train was heard and the two men rushed out of the cabin, Sergi bleeding from the gaping wounds in his head and neck, holding Guiseppe De Santes' gun.

De Carlo emptied his 38-caliber revolver of its exploded shells and ran down towards the bridge, where he unloaded his 32-caliber gun, then ran across the bridge and went to Newark. Sergi, leaving a bloody trail, stumbled over the fence, threw his gun away, and went to Lewis Giesey's farmhouse. Deputy Sheriff Collins found this revolver the following day. The handle was covered with blood.

Dr. Albert H. Hamilton, the Auburn gun expert, testified that the bullets from the 32-caliber revolver found in the bodies of the two murdered men were not fired from this gun, neither were the shells found on the railroad track. That was true. He could not say anything about the 38-caliber bullets nor exploded shells, as he did not have the gun. The stiletto wielded by Sergi was found in the cabin the day following the homicide.

The story of the shooting told by Pietro De Santes on the light engine which took him to Newark a few minutes after the shooting was not admitted upon the trial. In that story, he said De Carlo or "the other man," had two guns and shot him before his son was shot, and did all the shooting. He said Sergi had a gun and stiletto. The gun, however, but this he did not say, was the gun owned by the murdered son, which Sergi wrested from him in the struggle.

Although the jury brought De Carlo in guilty of murder in the second degree, several of them told the Times correspondent that had Sergi been on trial, they would have brought him in guilty of murder in the first degree. He was the man who got the wounds with the bloody axe on exhibition and he was the one that the dying father recognized.

Attorney Harry M. Ingram, of Potsdam, has the defence of Rosario Sergi. He has a tough proposition before him. The testimony as to how Sergi appeared at Lewis Giesey's farmhouse the night of the murder all cut up with blood streaming from gaping wounds in his head will do the business with the jurors all right.

Since the conviction of De Carlo, the latter has moped in his cell with his hands over his face, crying and refusing to eat. He expected to be [illegible] that because he had not confessed, he could not be convicted. Sergi, on the other hand, had been entertaining the other prisoners by his talented singing. He has a rare voice. It has not been heard since the verdict of the jury was carried to him. He is in mortal fear of the electric chair.

To Amend Copyright Act.

London, Dec. 30.—The Yorkshire Post says the Home Government has invited the Dominion Government to submit legislation amending the Copyright Act. It is impossible to have a uniform empire law if the new Canadian Government takes the same view as its predecessors. Germany and other countries are determined to stand aloof from the convention if Canada persists in her present attitude. Mr. Burrill's recent statements tend to spread the hope that Canada may come into line.

Richeson Rumor Denied.

Boston, Dec. 30.—Reports that an agreement has been reached between District Attorney Pelletier and counsel for the defence by which Rev. Mr. Richeson is to plead guilty to second degree murder were emphatically denied by the district attorney in a statement issued last night. "There is only one agreement possible," Mr. Pelletier says, "and that is a plea of guilty to the charge of murder in the first degree."

The district attorney again declares that the accused minister is in good physical and mental condition, and will be able to stand trial on Jan. 15, the date set.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS

London spends millions of dollars every year for somewhat stale vegetables imported from France and the coast countries, but England now is wisening up, and French experts are on hand to explain and introduce intensive culture, really a highly scientific art, which the future must depend upon to feed some sadly crowded countries.

In a recent pilot chart of the British meteorological office many observations of the singular phenomena "white water" was collected, says an exchange. It is more frequently seen in the tropical parts of the Indian Ocean than anywhere else, and it impresses some observers as weird, ghastly and awe-inspiring. The ocean has a milky look and the ship seems to be passing through a kind of luminous fog, in which sea and sky appear joined and the sense of distance is lost. The phenomenon is believed to be due to some form of phosphorescence, but a satisfactory explanation of it is yet lacking.

HIGH WATER DID CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE TO THE WORK AT THE NEW POWER HOUSE

Portion of Coffer Dam Is Swept Away and Large Steam Boiler Carried Down Stream.

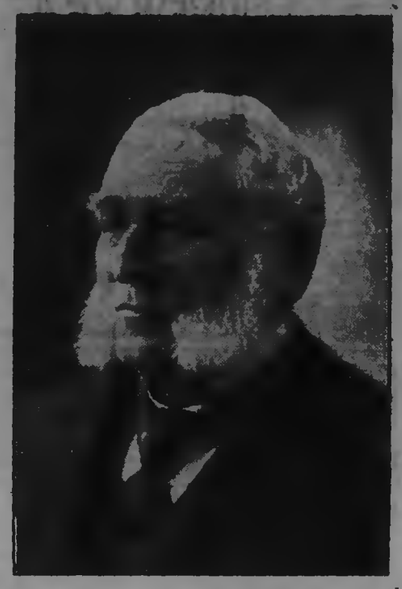
A JAM AT LAKEFIELD

Considerable damage was incurred to the construction work of Clarke and Monds, at the Auburn Power Company's plant, caused by the breaking away of a small portion of the old Auburn dam. The break occurred yesterday afternoon, between the hours of five and six o'clock, and is supposed to have been caused by the letting loose of a large volume of water somewhere between Peterborough and Lakefield. Following the break, that portion of the river south of the dam and adjacent to the new dam, now under construction, rose to a height of nearly four feet. The upperstructure of the coffer dam, together with a large-sized steam boiler, was carried down stream, a distance of two hundred feet. Two electric motors of forty and sixty horse power, respectively, were also badly damaged by water.

Old-timers assert that the river, has never been so high in years, a circumstance which is accounted for by the presence of an ice jam, near Lakefield. For several hours last evening considerable apprehension was felt for the safety of the old dam. The water rose so rapidly that for some time it swept over the running boards of the dam.

The construction work on the new dam will continue throughout the winter, was a statement made to an Examiner reporter this morning, by one of the men in charge. It is hoped to have the piers for the new dam built across the river by spring.

A huge Westinghouse transformer, weighing about 31 tons, and mounted on skids, held up the street car service in the North End for some time this morning, while it was being transferred across the road to the new power station.



MR. W. J. ARMSTRONG

Brother of Mrs. Jas. Stratton, Who Celebrated His Golden Wedding Recently

MR. AND MRS. ARMSTRONG HAVE GOLDEN WEDDING

Friends of Mrs. James Stratton, Gilmour St., Will be Interested in Learning of the Event Which Took Place at New Westminster, B.C.

The Examiner clips the following from the British Columbian of New Westminster. Mr. Armstrong is a brother of Mrs. Jas. Stratton, Gilmour street. His many friends in Millbrook and the townships of Cavan and North Monaghan, will be glad to know that Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong are both enjoying good health. Mr. Armstrong being in his eighty-fourth year:

"MARRIED."

"At St. John's Church, Victoria, on the 9th inst., by the Rev. R. Dundas, Mr. W. J. Armstrong, merchant of this city, and formerly of the county of Durham, Canada West, to Miss H. C. Ladner, of Victoria, V.I., formerly of the County of Cornwall, England."

The above wedding notice appeared in The British Columbian of the 12th of December, 1861.

On Saturday last the members of the family and the immediate relatives gathered at Roskestral, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Armstrong to celebrate with them the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding.

Although golden wedding celebrations are somewhat unusual, they are not unknown here, but the celebration of that anniversary in this case has unique features, for not only were Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong married in this province, but they have made their home in it ever since, and besides that, during all that time they have resided in one place—this city—and indeed, upon the same piece of ground. It is believed that no similar record can be produced in this province. Wonderful are the changes in this city and this province, during that fifty years.

Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong are pioneers of the pioneers. Mr. Armstrong came to this coast as a passenger on a sailing vessel from England, in the early fifties, and to British Columbia with the gold rush of 1858. He built the first house in this city in March 1859; he was our pioneer merchant; he was a member of the first City Council, 1860; he represented the city in the first Legislative Assembly, 1871; he was Minister of Finance in the De-Cosmos-Walken government 1872-76; and Provincial Secretary in the Beaven government, 1882-83. Mrs. Armstrong came to this province in 1859. Thus prominent in municipal and provincial affairs and also in social life the biography of Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong is almost the history of our city and a part of the history of our province.

Although well over the allotted span, both of them are remarkably energetic and vigorous, and keenly interested in present day affairs. During all of last Saturday, congratulations kept coming to them by letters and telegrams from friends in all parts of the province. They were also the recipients of many beautiful and valuable present suitable to the occasion.

After an evening spent at cards, toasts to the esteemed couple were proposed, honoured by the assembled guests and suitably acknowledged. About midnight, with "Auld Lang Syne," and other appropriate music, and repeated good wishes the guests departed.

WHAT KIND OF MEN DO WE NEED IN THE COUNCIL?

The Rev. W. C. Riddiford will take up the fourth sermon in the series he has been preaching on "Some questions the people are asking" at the Park Street Baptist Church, next Sunday evening. All are invited, especially would-be Councillors. In connection with the evening service at Park street, a watch-night service will be held from 11 p.m. to 12.10 p.m.

Two Bad Fires In Montreal Do Damage Of $240,000 Incendiarism Is Alleged Tetrault Shoe Company and Robinson Shoe Company Are Both Visited by Disastrous Fires at the Same Moment ---Firemen Had a Hard Fight.

Special Wire to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, Q., DEC. 30. —Two hundred thousand dollars damage was done to the Tetrault Shoe Company building by fire early this morning, which also gutted the building next door. The company employed many boys from the reformatory nearby and the iron bars on the windows to prevent them from escaping, made fire-fighting difficult. Had the building been occupied, the fatalities would have been certain. Three hundred small children in the Orphan's Home across the road were kept in fine order.

Almost at the same moment a fire broke out in the Robinson Shoe Co., doing forty thousand dollars damage. Ald. Robinson, who has been energetic in stamping out graft, is interested in both firms. Incendiarism is thought to have been the cause of the joint outbreak.

HON. MR. BECK'S PLEDGE TO THE RATEPAYERS RE THE POWER BY-LAW

As stated in yesterday's Examiner the following explicit statement by Hon. Adam Beck, Chairman of the Hydro-Electric Commission, removes the main ground of criticism of the Power Bylaw to be voted for on Monday next, January 1st:

"I will give you my pledge in writing that the Hydro-Electric Commission will enter into no contract with Peterborough for power until a bylaw is first submitted to the people."

This statement very largely removes the ground upon which the Examiner has based criticism of one missing feature of the bylaw, namely the assurance that any financial obligation incurred would be submitted to the ratepayers for their approval or adoption.

The Examiner did not oppose the bylaw on its merits: it merely objected to the power the passage of the bylaw would give to commit the city to large expenditure without consulting the ratepayers.

Mr. Beck's pledge printed above disposed of this objectionable feature or possibility of the bylaw.

In compliance with Mr. Beck's expressed willingness to give a pledge in writing, the Examiner telegraphed to him yesterday. No answer has been received except the following received this morning by Mayor Morrow:

London, Ont., Dec. 30th, 1911.

Mayor Morrow,
Peterboro, Ont.,

Received telegram from Examiner, which I have not replied to. Am not accustomed to be asked or to give written pledges. Statement made by me at meeting will be carried out.

ADAM BECK.

In this despatch Mr. Beck has practically given a written pledge to carry out the promise made by him at the Opera House, and is so far satisfactory assurance, and tends to further justify the sole objection urged by the Examiner, and invite larger popular approval of the bylaw.

The pledge given by him on Thursday night was evidentally satisfactory to the people, and coupled with the confirming telegram, will no doubt result in a much stronger support of the bylaw than would have been probable in the absence of such double assurance.

The ratepayers are the ones to be affected, and the decision properly rests with them.

If they are satisfied that the assurance of Mr. Beck covers the submission of all questions of indebtedness to be incurred in the making of a contract, they are justified in supporting the bylaw, and will later have the opportunity, if the pledge is carried out, of voting upon a bylaw before the city is pledged to any indebtedness.

The Examiner has done its full duty to the ratepayers by bringing out a pledge from the responsible head of the Commission, protecting the ratepayers from any liability without their consent.

Hydro-Electric By-Law.

Are you in favour of the city obtaining a supply of power from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario?

This is the programme the ratepayers of Peterborough will have an opportunity of voting upon on Monday, New Year's Day.

A list of the polling places is given elsewhere in this issue. For the benefit of those qualified to vote, it may be stated that the polls will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Considerable interest is being taken in the aldermanic contest and in the fate of the Hydro-Electric measure and it is likely that a good vote will be polled, although it will not be as big as if there was a mayoralty fight.

The Examiner has arranged to bulletin the returns on Monday night as quickly as they come in from the polling sub-division. Everything should be over early and the complete results should be known before 7 o'clock.

A HARMLESS WAY TO DARKEN THE HAIR

A Little Sage and Sulphur Makes Gray Hair Vanish---A Remedy for All Hair Troubles

Who does not know the value of sage and sulphur for keeping the hair dark, soft, glossy and in good condition? As a matter of fact, sulphur is a natural element of hair, and a deficiency of it in the hair is held by many scalp specialists to be connected with loss of colour and vitality of the hair. Unquestionably there is no better remedy for hair and scalp troubles, especially premature grayness, than sage and sulphur, if properly prepared. The Wyeth Chemical Company of New York put up an ideal remedy of this kind, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, and authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

If you have dandruff, or if your hair is thin or turning gray, get a bottle of this remedy from your druggist to-day, and see what it will do for you.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists. Special agents, Warne Drug Co.

IT MAKES A DIFFERENCE.

Politics changes the point of view very quickly. The Prince Edward Islanders of the Conservative persuasion have been saying, for years, that they must have a tunnel, a whole tunnel, and nothing but a tunnel, between the mainland and the Island, ad they condemned the Liberal Government because it did not build a terminal. But the moment a Conservative Government comes into power, the tunnel ceases to be an indispensible necessity, and a common, every-day car-ferry will do. The Laurier Government was condemned by good Tory Toronto for not doing more for Toronto harbour. Their neglect was a crying shame. But Toronto's demand of a Liberal Government was not very sincere, except as a basis of complaint against a Grit Government. The moment the Borden Government wants to do something for Toronto Harbour and proposes turning it over to a Commission, Toronto, kicks—and a section of it opposes the Harbour Commission idea. The political complexion of the man at the helm makes a great difference, has a great modifying influence upon the question of indispensable necessity.

CHRISTMAS SATURDAY NIGHT.

The first number of Christmas Saturday night ranks easily among the foremost publications of its kind on the continent—in all respects, artistic excellence of illustration, and literary merit of letter press. About seventy large folio pages are replete with excellent and seasonable fiction, quite above the standard of what may be regarded, for want of a better term, ephemeral literature, profusely illustrated; a story of Arthur Stringer, in his best vein; one by Sir Arthur Quiller Couch and "Rev. Jack Matheson," by Agnes C. Laut,—a vivid pen sketch of a noble character, and, incidentally, an invaluable contribution to the intimate history of the underlying and provoking causes of the Northwest Rising of 1885. A fine bit of fiction by Nellie McClung and a Christmas story from the French, with poems, etc., comprise the contents of the first—in a double sense—Christmas number of Saturday Night. If the 'prentice hand of the publishers, achieves so striking a success in the first essay, the public will look forward with eager interest to succeeding Christmas issues of Saturday Night.

A BUFFALO REMINDER.

The Manitoba Free Press, shows inexhaustible invention in discovering subjects for its unique annual Christmas remembrances of the press and exposition of the resources of the great west. The Free Press has marked the Christmas tides of the past ten years, by the presentation of some remarkable product, indigenous to the west, all of great interest and all with an interesting story. But this year's souvenir, to adopt the slang of the hour, "has them all skinned," or rather tanned. This year's gift is in the form of a small rectangle of buffalo hide, tanned, and embossed with a figure in bronze, of a buffalo, so as to form a paper weight. A booklet accompanies, a history of the being, passing and return of the buffalo—how it previously existed in millions, how it was extinguished and how the buffalo has come to its own again, established through the public spirit of the Liberal government, in the National park, the greatest preserve and herd of the buffalo in the world.. The Free Press ends its little book with statistics regarding its own progress and that of the west, so roseate and confident, that one may expect next year's Free Press souvenir to consist of a picture of the westerner who "knocks" the west, if such a thing is obtainable.

Banks' Sporting Goods Store will be open on New Year's Day

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Not much surprise will be caused by the refusal of Russia to admit the Salvation Army. The Holy Synod probably feels, says the Montreal Herald, that Russia can provide all the "Blood and Fire" that are needed in the country.

An energetic candidate, like Mr. G. N. Gordon, can hardly escape attention in the aldermanic contest, and it is observable that the ratepayers of the Centre Ward are giving him a hearty support that seems to justify the anticipation that his energy and enterprise will find valuable exercise in the City Council of next year. He has a good, sound platform and with the ability to assist in its application to the needs of the city, he will make a valuable member of the City Council.

If a nation, like individuals, is to be judged by the company kept, Great Britain's reputation is suffering by being tied up with Russia—with a country capable of the atrocities she commits in Persia. The Persians need not think, however, they are singled out for special attention. Russia's own people suffer day by day, and have done so for centuries, atrocities as bad, in effect, if different in form, as are being inflicted upon the Persians.

PROBLEM OF WINTER EMPLOYMENT.

(Monetary Times)

A correspondent truly suggests that one of the greatest drawbacks to the prosperity of Canada, especially in the what we may term the thoroughly cleared parts of Ontario, is the want of profitable employment of farm labourers during the winter season, which makes it impracticable for the employers to keep the proper number of labourers to do the work which accumulates and become emergent during the other three seasons of the year, and makes this labour very expensive, thus deterring enterprise. What appears to be lacking is a new and distinct industry. The discovery and propagation of such an industry would be a wonderful value. More intensive cultivation of the land would do this by increasing the acreage yield, by conservation in silos and cold storage warehouses, by keeping more live stock, requiring more attention in buildings instead of roaming on scanty pastures.

This means the use of more capital than is ordinarily possessed by the farmers and more enterprise than now exists amongst them. Capital would be required for cottages on farms, because the only way to keep a good man is to let him have a home and permanent employment. But, under proper supervision as to outlays, it should not be difficult for the Provincial or Dominion government to arrange a system of credits. If one township were taken as a test locality, our correspondent believes the demonstrated benefit would induce the extension of the plan, and the wealth of the province would be quadrupled in ten years, whilst we would have a population of sturdy, healthy, happy and prosperous people, who would not be tempted to any other promising part of the world.

The problem of winter employment undoubtedly will become more marked in years to come. If we can solve that problem intelligently, the Dominion should be able to escape many undesirable social complications.

No Change In Potato Situation

A representative of the firm of Heak & Son, brick and tile manufacturers at Drayton, Ont., was in the city yesterday, negotiating for the sale of two car loads of potatoes. This indispensable household commodity still demands a high price, with no immediate prospects of a slump. The supply as far as can be learned, is plentiful, a number of carloads having arrived in the city from outside points during the past week. The price ranges from $1.50 to $2.00 per bag of 90 lbs.

How The Persian Problem Has Come To The Acute Point

A reader of The Woodstock Sentinel-Review asks for some information concerning W. Morgan Shuster, whose name has been figuring so prominently in the despatches for some days. The information available is not very extensive, but perhaps sufficient may be found to help some people to a better understanding of the situation.

Not to go back too far, it may serve the purpose to begin with the time when Persia, owing to the mismanagement of her own affairs, found herself forced to accept some accommodation in money matters from Russia. The friendship of a great and greedy nation is often more fatal to a weak and needy one than open enmity, and so Persia soon found it to be in regard to Russia. Concession after concession was obtained from the Shah in return for alleged favours granted by Russia.

Meantime the affairs of Persia were getting no better, and it became the policy of Russia to make it appear to the world that Russian interference and assistance were necessary in order to save the country from utter anarchy. Great Britain also became interested in the affairs of Persia. A glance at the map of Asia will show why. The British Empire, because of British India, is geographically as intimately related to Persia on the south as Russia is on the north, and the prospect of a Russian port on the Persian Gulf has never been favourably regarded in England. So it was that while Russia was spreading her influence from one direction Great Britain began spreading her influence from another. Eventually a "friendly" arrangement was reached between Great Britain and Russia whereby an imaginary line was drawn across Persia, beyond which Russian influence should not penetrate southward and British influence should not penetrate northward. Great Britain and Russia further agreed that Persia needed the help of strong and friendly hands to keep the mismanagement of its affairs from becoming a menace to the peace of the world.

The operation of this agreement, the British people were assured, was not to stimulate but to prevent outside interference with the domestic affairs of Persia. However that may be, the Persian people became convinced that they were quite capable of attending to their own business without any of the "friendly" assistance that either Russia or Great Britain was inclined to offer. It was at this stage that W. Morgan Shuster appeared on the scene. The Persians were looking around for a competent financier, and not unnaturally turned to the United States. The Persian ambassador sought the advice of President Taft, and as a result Mr. Shuster was chosen. He appears to have justified the choice. He succeeded in a short time in wiping out Persia's floating debt and in putting a snug sum in the national treasury.

This in itself was an offence to Russia. What right had anybody to help the Persian people to put their affairs in order when Russia had undertaken the task herself? But there was worse than that. The Persian people had deposed their Shah because they felt he was more loyal to Russia than he was to Persia. An effort was made to restore him, and this effort, it was believed, was backed, if not originated, by Russia. Mr. Shuster brought the effort to naught, and so gave additional offence to Russia. Finally Mr. Shuster furnished Russia with the excuse for which she had been waiting by appointing certain officials offensive to Russia to operate in that part of Persia which Russia regarded as within her sphere of influence. Then Russia demanded the dismissal of Mr. Shuster and the rest of the story is familiar. There was a natural delay in acceding to Russia's demands, and this delay has been punished by what appears to have been a most brutal and cold-blooded massacre of Persian people.

Mr. Shuster has been turned adrift; but the incident may not be closed. The people of England have been stirred by the stories of the massacre, and the British Government will, no doubt, be given an opportunity for a fuller explanattion of its attitude to the whole question of the Persian problem. Great Britain is in a difficult position. Neither from considerations of humanity, nor of imperial policy, can she countenance the high-handed and barbarous conduct of Russia; but she is bound by her relations with Russia on the one hand, and handicapped by her relations with Germany on the other.

Should Be Getting Power Here At $20 Per H. P.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I notice the Power Company, in their opposition to the Hydro-Electric by-law, have, in an advertisement, quoted prices at which power is being sold to municipalities in Western Ontario, and while the figures may be absolutely correct, they only, like many other articles used by the power monopoly, convey a half-truth, for the citizens are left to infer that prices for power in Peterborough would be equally high, which is not the case, and which no one knows better than the author of the advertisement.

As every intelligent person knows, and as has been pointed out by Hon. Mr. Beck, the higher cost is due to the long distances power has to be transmitted from Niagara, and the very heavy expenditure for transmission. In Peterborough, with power at our doors, this heavy expenditure is unnecessary, and the loss of power in transmission would be eliminated. Mr. Beck has explained that we, in Peterborough, while we are now paying $20.00 per H. P. should from having the power right at our doors, be getting it for about $12.00.

Yours truly,
Power User.

ALD. ANDERSON ENDORSES THE HYDRO-ELECTRIC BY-LAW

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—Will you kindly allow me space to refer as briefly as I can to one or two points in the arguments used in opposition to the Hydro-Electric by-law, almost every one of which misrepresent the facts. In the first place the terrible 'bogey of the City Council "mortgaging" the city for anywhere from $250,000.00 to $850,000.00 as held up, (of course four, five or six hundred thousand dollars is of no account in their calculations.

Now, you know very well that nothing of the kind is proposed, as the Commission, or in other words, the Ontario government, will expend the amount for development and deliver the power to the city limits. Oh—but a correspondent says this is only a quibble, as the city would have to pay interest on the investment, which, would mean the same thing as paying interest on a mortgage. Now, admitting this to be correct, then, on the same principal is the city not at this moment mortgaged for, and paying interest on, the amount now invested by the power company in developing power for industrial, municipal and domestic purposes, and at a higher rate than four per cent. charged by the Commission on their investment. Any intelligent man now knows he is now paying, through his light bills, interest on the investment of the power company. If they classify the expenditure of the Commission as representing a mortgage, why do they ignore the fact that there is a mortgage now for just the amount invested in developing power used in the city. There is absolutely no difference in the two propositions, except this, that the Hydro-Electric mortgage would be preferable on account of the lower rate of interest. I hope the citizens of Peterborough will not be led away by bogeys of this nature and will on Monday give an overwhelming majority for the by-law and free themselves from the power monopoly, who are fighting it with such determination. Vote for the people's power.

Yours truly,
J. C. ANDERSON.

ANCHOR ICE AGAIN CAUSES TROUBLE TO POWER COMPANY

Anchor, or frazil, ice, as it is more properly known, caused some trouble to the Otonabee Power Company plant again, last night, necessitating a complete shut down of the plant. Anchor ice is a rather curious phenomenon for which different explanations have been made. It is the name used to denote needles of ice floating beneath the surface of the water, which, when they mass, clog the turbines of the power development companies. It occurs only in the early part of the year, or in the spring, when a cold wave suddenly succeeds open weather.

Every effort was made at the Otonabee Company's power house last night to avoid a shut down, but without avail. The floating ice accumulated in the huge water wheels, and, freezing in a compact mass, brought the whole plant to a standstill.

"Not Outs" Held Enjoyable Dance

The annual "Not Outs" dance, held at the Conservatory of Music on Thursday night, was a delightful success. There were a very large number present, probably the largest of any social function of the season. The 'Not Outs' are comprised of pupils and ex-pupils of Miss Ivy Coventry, dancing instructress of the Conservatory, and this event is one always anticipated with great pleasure.

The music for the evening, which was supplied by the Misses Gladman, was greatly appreciated.

Refreshments were served at the close of the dancing programme, and the gathering dispersed about 12.15.

The patronesses for the evening were as follows: Mrs. H. D. Burnette, Mrs. J. H. Eastwood, Mrs. E. L. Goodwill, Mrs. G. W. Hatton, Mrs. W. H. Hill, Mrs. Rupert Gliddon.

Wm. Langford Jr.

For North Ward Alderman

To THE RATEPAYERS—

I am in favour of The Hydro Electric bylaw, but if elected will support only such a proposition as will give the city the lowest possible rates for power & light.

The city's interest will be looked after to the best of my ability and its affairs managed as economically as possible consistent with the progress of the city. 5d-148

Yours Respectfully,

Wm. Langford Jr.

Card From

Ex-Alderman Gillespie

Centre Ward

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough.

Ladies and Gentlemen—

Having been again urged by a large number of ratepayers interested in the welfare of the city, I have consented to accept the nomination for Alderman for 1912.

My previous record in the Council is known to you all. If again honoured with your confidence I will endeavour to render such efficient service as will conduce to the best interests of the city irrespective of wards or boundaries.

As my business engagements will not permit me to personally interview the Electors, I take this means of soliciting your votes and influence.

Yours respectfully,

Geo. A. Gillespie

Dec. 94, 1911.

MORROW

For Centre Ward

For the first time I present myself as a Candidate for election to the Council of the city.

I hope to receive a fair measure of support such as is freely accorded a new man, and new candidate.

If elected I will serve the city just as faithfully and as well as I can, never forgetting what is best for it and its people.

Time will not permit of a personal canvass, but I ask for support.

Yours Respectfully,

5d-148 Ladies & Gentlemen.

VOTE TO RE-ELECT JOS. R. METHERAL

in CENTRE WARD

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—

I have been entrusted with your confidence for the past three years and my record stands open before you. It may show no extraordinary ability, but an endeavour to be straight-forward and honest in all dealing. I have not been swayed by cliques or outside influences, but voted and worked at all times in the interests of the ratepayers in general and will continue to do so in the future, if re-elected. I would advise the electors to vote for the Hydro-Electric Commiss on Power By-law. I firmly believe that the Hydro-Electric Commission will give Peterborough power at rates considerably reduced from those at present in force, but I pledge myself that no contract for power either with the Hydro-Electric Commission or private corporation shall be signed by the City Council without a By-law to that effect being submitted to the ratepayers.

Wishing you all the Compliments of the Season.

G. N. GORDON

FOR ALDERMAN

CENTRE WARD

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CENTRE WARD.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

As a candidate for Alderman for one of the two seats in the Centre Ward I respectfully solicit your votes.

My platform is briefly this:

1. Obtain Hydro-Electric estimates and reports as to prices, terms, etc., of obtaining power for the city's manufacturers, and for house and store lighting.

2. Abate the nuisance caused by the G. T.R. using Bethune St. as a shunting yard, which injuriously affects hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of realty.

3. Obtain legislation allowing reduction of taxes on businesses and improvements and increasing taxation of land values, thus making the holders of vacant land pay their share of taxes.

4. Have every milk-vendor's milk inspected at least fortnightly and a report with the milkman's name published, showing the proportions of butter fat contained in each lot.

5. Consideration of the question of permanent improvement of highways.

6. Begin an aggressive campaign to obtain new industries and inaugurate a strong publicity scheme.

There are two Aldermen to be elected for the Centre Ward. G. A. Gillespie is contesting one seat with J. R. Metheral, and W. G. Morrow, of Charlotte St., is contesting the other seat with me.

If elected, I will energetically support a progressive campaign for the city's advancement.

Wishing you the compliments of the season, I am, yours faithfully,

G. N. GORDON.

Dec. 26, 1911.

VOTE FOR

EX-ALDERMAN J. J. DUFFUS

IN THE WEST WARD

To the Ratepayers of the West Ward and Peterborough Citizens in general:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—Having the honour of being duly nominated and urged by a large number of representative citizens to be a candidate in the West Ward, I have decided to again enter the Aldermanic field. As it will be impossible for me to interview each voter, I hereby most respectfully solicit your support and influence to assure my election.

If you so honour me I will pledge myself to do my utmost to assist in executing the city's business in a prudent and business like manner.

New industries, to my mind, is the one essential toward the future growth and success of our city, and I am in favour of a vigorous campaign to obtain cheap power and light, and also to induce the Radial Railway Co. to make extensive extensions. I would like to see the centre of our city with a permanent roadway.

I am opposed to the policy of increasing a man's taxes every time he makes improvements and minor extensions, and would support a measure to eliminate this condition of affairs.

Wishing all a bright and prosperous New Year.

Yours very respectfully,

JOS. J. DUFFUS

4d-149.

Your Vote and Influence is solicited in favour of

Ald. Edgar

Wishing you all the compliments of the season. 5d-148

Wishing the electors a Happy New Year. 5d-148

WINNIPEG BONSPIEL TO BE BEST IN ITS HISTORY

WINNIPEG, DEC. 29.— That the twenty-fourth annual bonspiel of the Manitoba Curling Association, which opens in Winnipeg February 8th, is destined to be one of the greatest events of its kind in the history of the sport, is being freely prophesied by those who are in a position to know. Forty-two prizes, valued at nearly $6,000, will be awarded to the successful contestants.

The event will be marked by special competition to determine the final ownership of the Walker Theatre Trophy (an international cup). In the five years that it has been up for competition no club has won it more than once, consequently five clubs will have to play for it at the coming bonspiel. The five clubs interested are Assiniboine, Winnipeg; St. Paul, Minn.; Glenboro,, Man.; Dauphin, Man., and Thistle, Winnipeg.

The final ownership of the McMillan Cup will also be decided by the following clubs; Napinka, Man.; Thistle, Winnipeg; Kisley, Sask.; Gainsboro, Sask.; and Civic, Winnipeg. All competitors winning a cup or first prize will have to take a group photograph of the team.

Both the city and citizens of Winnipeg have been generous in their response to the call made by the association for funds with which to defray the expenses incident to the visit of the Scottish curlers to the bonspiel. Over 200 entries have been placed on file up to date, and those in charge are confident that at least fifty more will be present when the starting gun is fired February 8. This will establish a new record for curling entries made in Winnipeg, which is now recognized as the greatest curling centre in the world.

Among the eight clubs now in the city nearly fifty good sheets of curling ice will be available for the visiting rinks in the bonspiel, the latest of these being that from the New Union Terminal Club at the old Canadian Northern Railway station, which has been converted into a curling rink, with six good sheets of ice.

Representatives from the Manitoba, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the Northwest associations, the latter being a branch of the Manitoba association, will meet in St. Paul, February 7, where they will join the Scots and participate in a matinee performance, following which the whole aggregation will come to Winnipeg.

In addition to entering all events for which they are eligible, each of the eastern rinks is expected to play three representative rinks from the Western association, six from Alberta, six from Saskatchewan and six from British Columbia, all of which will be fraternal games and apart from the regular matches. At the conclusion of each of these matches the easterners will be the guests of their western opponents at a banquet.

Theatre parties, to be followed by luncheons and smokers, are being arranged, and the committee in charge have been instructed to spare nothing which will add to the entertainment of the visitors.

A feature worthy of special mention is the fact that no admission is ever charged to witness a curling match. The doors of the rinks will be thrown wide open to the public, and a cordial invitation is extended to everybody to attend. Curling is one of the few purely amateur sports which depends entirely upon the generosity of its members and patrons for its maintenance.

All Union Barber Shops will be open MONDAY until 12 o'clock noon.

Geo. Brousseau.

BASEBALL

Frank Chance the peerless leader of the Chicago Cubs, has paid a singular tribute to the Philadelphia Athletics. In a recent interview he said: "In my opinion, it will take from one to three years for the National League to develop a team which is capable of wresting the world's title from the Athletics. Most of McGraw's mainstays are comers, and New York should have a grand team two years hence. In fact, it is possible that this is the team which eventually will take the measure of the Athletics, although in the process of building, we expect to be up in the race ourselves, while Pittsburg will bear watching. Fred Clarke always has his club up in the race. He has been fortunate in the selection of his pitchers, and if O'Toole performs up to his advance notices the Pirates will have to be taken into consideration when it comes to making calculations."

Chance says that no major league club can hope to win more than four pennants, while in a majority of cases three will prove to be the maximum. This is easily explained. It takes from three to four years to build up a pennant winning club, and once a team is brought up to this standard it is only a question of three or four years until the players begin to slow up. This may be almost imperceptible, but becomes apparent when it comes to summing up results at the end of the season, and the manager suddenly finds himself up against the proposition of rebuilding the club. This is the situation which Chance now faces.

NEW YORK, DEC. 29.—Promoters of the new outlaw baseball league came out with a startling statement yesterday. In it they announced that the league will shortly be incorporated in New Jersey, after which a baseball war will follow that will make all previous ructions in baseball look like skirmishes. The Brotherhood fight will become a memory and the fight between the American and National Leagues will become a small-sized affair in comparison. Not only has sufficient capital to finance all eight clubs been pledged, but grounds have been secured in all but one of the cities to be invaded. And in that case there is plenty of land available where a park can be located, and the sites are so many and real estate owners are so anxious to rent that no combination of the older leagues can shut the new one out.

The promoters go on to say that the agents of the league in formation are in possession of the winter addresses of practically every baseball player in the United States, and at the proper time, which is now only a few days distant, players of the American and National Leagues and the A. A. leagues will be given a chance to join the clubs in the new organization on terms such as none of the older leagues ever offered.

The circuit of the new league is to consist of the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Washington, Baltimore Pittsburg, Chicago, Indianapolis, and Kansas City. The New York grounds are to be located on Long Island, close to a subway extension, more easily reached from the heart of the city than either the Polo grounds or the American League Park. The Brooklyn grounds will also be as good or better than Washington Prak. In Baltimore the league is to have the choice of two ball parks. For the Pittsburg Club option has been obtained on a plot in Allegheny, not far from Forbes Field where the Pirates play. In Chicago the Park will be easily reached from all parts of the city.

TALK ON PUGILISM

(By James J. Corbett)

Of late there has been considerable space devoted to the discussion of that always interesting subject, "the scientific boxer vs. the fighter." Arguments are advanced that the methods of the latter type of ringman are the superior, and in support of these claims the success attained by certain fighters of the rugged varfety is offered in evidence.

To permit these statements to get by unchallenged would be to confess that scientific boxing had died a natural death, is a lost art, so to speak, which is far from the facts in the case.

The success achieved by the roughhouse style of milling is due in the main to leniency of referees. Such a thing as right enforcement of the rules of boxing is unknown in this country, and as long as this condition of affairs is allowed to exist science and skill will be badly handicapped.

Ad Wolgast is the "white haired boy" chosen by the pessimistic experts as an example of the rise of the rugged fighter and the decline of the skilled boxer. It is at all times difficult to argue against success, particularly the success of your friend, but duty calls and I must obey.

Wolgast has won his spurs on strength and stamina alone. So far as he is concerned this would tend to prove the claim that strength has it on skill. But Wolgast is an exception to the general rule. In him we have a miniature of the strong men of ancient history. With endurance and might of a middleweight his remarkable capacity for punishment that would slaughter the average lightweight was made clear in the engagement that won him the championship from Bat Nelson.

NOT LIVING UP TO RULES.

On the other hand how would our lightweight champion fare in an engagement with a skilled opponent (in England for instance), where it is a case of living up to the rules or "getting the hook?" Supposing Ad was not allowed to cut loose with that infighting of his, and was forced to break clean under penalty of disqualification? Section 2 of the Marquis of Queensbury rules says plainly, "no wrestling or hugging allowed." Has Adolph in recent contests been compelled to observe this rule, let me ask? Decidedly not. If such were the case he would have been shorn of his most effective methods of administering punishment.

Considering the handicap in the non-observance of the rules of the game, clever boxers are holding their own nicely. Occasionally a McFarland, a Gibbons or an Attell springs up whose great skill more than offsets the many advantages granted his less skilled if sturdier rivals through laxity of ring officials. Incidentally the success of such men are body blows to the claims that scientific fighting is in a state of decline.

Boxers are born, not made. All the teaching in the world will not develop a pupil unless the natural gift or talent is there. Boxing as taught in schools and gymnasiums is rudimentary. To become adept in the art of "hit, stop and get away" a boy needs individuality of style or system. The teachings must be adhered to only as fits this individuality and style. No one method of attack or defence will prove successful at all times. A successful boxer is one who can adapt and change his style as occasion requires.

Given an even break a clever boxer will more than hold his own against an opponent who depends on strength and fighting in the clinches or on the breaks. The former plans his battle like a general; the latter depends on head-down, bull-like rushes and holding and hitting in the clinches. This latter style of milling is not permissable by the code and is a product of recent years made possible through ignorance or timidity of referees. Intelligence and skill are bound to win out in pugilism when the game is conducted according to Hoyle.

THE WEEK IN GOTHAM.

There was quantity if not quality in the boxing bill of fare served to Gotham fans the past week. A majority of clubs held shows and the inner lights of the ring were given opportunities to display their goods. The headliners must have been on strike for there was no match during the six days that could be dignified by the title of "star bout."

The coming week will show improvement. One Round Hogan and Abe Attell were to have started the ball rolling, but the featherweight champion has announced his inability to carry out the agreement owing to an injured hand. Some other boy of class, possibly Bat Nelson, is to be substituted for Attell. Promoter Gil Boag is anxious to land the Battler, but the latter's "modest" demands would leave nothing but the furniture and building for Hogan and the club owners, so there will likely be nothing doing with the ex-champion.

Packey McFarland is also booked to illustrate to New Yorkers how an "old-school" boxer can handle one of the modern style products. He boxes Young Hickey, a local lad who has been mowing over a number of ambitious youngsters, and who has been side-stepped by many of the boys with newspaper reputations.

Later in the week the much advertised K. O. Brown will meet Leach Cross. This bout will be of special interest to Manhattanites as both boys are native sons. Cross has been boxing in splendid form of late and it has long been his ambition to match his skill with that of the youngster whose reputations rests largely upon his two contests with Ad Wolgast.

Christmas week the sports of this town will be treated to two heavyweight battles of the elimination series. On December 27 Tom Kennedy and Carl Morris meet for the first time, another case of skill versus brawn and stamina.

The following evening brings together the two Als—Kaufman and Palser—at the National Sporting Club, and the odds are in favour of a short and bloody battle. Kaufman has a mighty punch, while Palser has demonstrated he is a glutton for that sort of thing. He will find more sting to the former blacksmith's wallops than he has been accustomed to and his gameness will be put to a severe test. His manager, Tom O'Rourke, believes Palser the coming champion.

IN THE ANTIPODES.

Dusky Sam McVey punctured another promising white hope bubble in far off Australia last Sunday. By knocking out Jack Lester in eight rounds, the negro gets a clear title to the Australian championship.

McVey can call himself champion of the Antipodes only while he sticks around that part of the globe. The championship is a "residential" honour and cannot be shipped away to foreign shores. And then Sam Langford may rob McVey of his glory when the pair meet Christmas afternoon. Sambo has long been ambitious to own a title of some sort, and, should he trim the other smoke, may decide to stay there indefinitely.

Provided Langford makes good in Australia and remains to gather up the shekels that the stage offers as a reward for duty well done in the squared circle, we may any day expect the announcement of Joe Jeanette's departure in that direction. The latter is more than anxious, he is "jes' crazy," to have another try at his old [illegible] And Joe likes the marathon [illegible] for his. He is now flirting via cable with Promoter Hugh McIntosh.

Jack Dillon is the latest middleweight to qualify as champion timber. This youngster is said to have outpointed Frank Klaus in a six-round bout at Pittsburgh. The argument is made that Klaus is not a six-round boxer. Be that as it may, Dillon must have class to put it on the Pittsburgher who has been generally regarded as the best in the division.

Matchmakers tell me the local welters want none of Mike Gibbons' game. Why not try to arrange a match between Packey McFarland and the clever Michael? If Gibbons can make 142 pounds I do not think he will find Packey averse to the match. Ye gods and little fishes, what a box-office attraction this would prove. Little Old New York would simply go dippy over a ten-round match with these young stars as principals.

If Packey can't be secured why not Young Erne of Philadelphia? A substantial offer might persuade that clever boxer to leave the Quaker City long enough to try Mike out. As a limited round performer, Erne is second to none in the country at his weight, and I should judge he is of about the same general make-up and heft as the St. Paul marvel.

I AM TOLD THAT:

The "solar plexus" and the "ulna bone" have been retired in favour of the vermiform appendix.

Jimmy (pardon, please), James Edward Britt is "in our midst" and contemplates an attack on the drama.

The Boxing Commission has been doing the "gun shne" and has gathered enough evidence to put several local clubs out of business.

The police stopped a boxing match in Cambridge, Mass., on account of "roughness." (And this in the home of football.)

Half a score pugilistic managers have failed in their attempts to lure Mike Gibbons, Gotham's latest ring idol, away from his first love.

A Teutonic boxer yclept, "One Round" Siegel, half killed a Milesian, answering to the classic name of Tyrone Costello, in less time than it takes to tell. (Wurra Wurra, please note.)

Sailor Burke has Tom Sharkey lashed to the mast when it comes to downright prodigality with the coin. (The Sailor keeps in fighting trim by saving car fare.)

"Go East, young man," is the battle cry of ambitious boxers west of the Hudson River. (The game must be pretty soft in this burg, judging from the easy manner in which visitors usually clean up.)

Peterboro is a city in name, make it a city in reality. We want better streets, better and cheaper lighting. Boost the place you live in & then watch it grow. Vote for HILL, aldermanic candidate, west ward. One man to be elected only.

The People's Power or The Monopoly's Power—Which Shall Own It?

Vote on Monday on the Question

The Hon. Adam Beck in his address in the Opera House made a number of things clear. Among them were:

That the vote on Monday would not commit the electors to a contract. If they, by their votes ask for people's power, the people's Commission, appointed by the Government, will get the necessary information, and then another vote will have to be taken to authorize the necessary expenditure.

The question now is, Do the people want that information?

Every municipality that has taken power through the Commission has reduced rates, and provided for paying for the plant out of the revenue, and still has a surplus.

Light is furnished in London at 4½ cents, and is is 120 miles from the water power. In Peterborough 7 cents is charged. It should be less than in London.

If the power monopoly retains control of the water powers, it will control the supply of electricity and the price. If the people desire to own the water powers the Commission will get them for the people, and all the profits and benefits will belong to the people.

Do you want the power monopoly or the people to own the power in this district? If you say the people, then vote on Monday in favour of obtaining power.

In the cities which obtain power from the Commission, the price will go down steadily as more power is used—because it belongs to the people. Where the people do not own power, the price goes up as more is used and it becomes scarcer—because it belongs to a monopoly.

When the Hydro-Electric cities pay off the cost of their plants (which is being done out of revenue from the plants) the price of power in them will go down with a thud. Here, if the monopoly still controls the powers, the tendency of prices will be upwards. How then could Peterborough compete with those cities?

Do you want the monopoly to control the powers here? If you do, vote against obtaining power.

Do you want lower rates for light and power—

Do you want the people to own the water powers—

Do you want the benefits and profits of these great natural resources to go to the people—

Do you want rates that will be lower and that will be steadily reduced—

Do you want Peterborough to be in as good a position as any and better than most cities—

If you do, vote on Monday for obtaining power.

The vote on Monday WILL NOT authorize the Council to expend money. When amounts are ascertained ANOTHER VOTE must be taken to obtain that authority.

The vote on Monday WILL SAY whether the ratepayers want the people or the power monopoly to own and control the water powers.

Vote in favour of obtaining power, and by doing so vote in the interests of the City, of yourself, of your children and of your children's children.

DO NOT NEGLECT TO VOTE—ON MONDAY.

PORT HOPE CHURCH WANTS REV. HENRY J. KEITH

An official deputation from St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Port Hope, waited upon the Rev. Mr. Keith, last night, offering him the pastorate of that church. The proposition was so entirely unexpected that Mr. Keith had to allow the deputation to retire without an answer of a definite nature.

Rev. Mr. Keith has been in Peterborough five years and his successful and earnest work in this city has no doubt been responsible for his being sought after by other congregations. The call to Port Hope by the way, is not the only one that has been recently made to Mr. Keith.

HOCKEY PRACTICE TO-NIGHT

It will be welcome news to the hockeyists that there will be hockey practice at Brock Street Rink to-night at 7 o'clock, for the members of the intermediate O. H. A. team. Every member of the intermediates is expected to be on hand sharp on time, as it is important that there should be a full turnout at every practise before the first game which takes place here next Friday night, with Lindsay. On Monday (New Year's) morning both juniors and intermediates will practise and all junior players are asked to be out.

CURLING

The Secretary of the Peterborough Curling Club announces that several sheets of ice will be available for use on Monday afternoon and evening.

ON A JAPANESE RAILROAD

Station platforms in Japan, as in Britain and Europe, are level with the car steps. The stationmaster is quite a dignified official, has a uniform and carries a sword on special occasions. The uniform consists of the ordinary regulation blue, with gilt buttons and gold braid and a bright scarlet band around his cap. He is rather a showy individual when he gets it on, and as he walks along the platform things move. When there is a celebrated dignitary passing through, such as the Emperor or a member of parliament, he buckles on his sword.

About 130 pounds of baggage is allowed on each first-class ticket, and baggage will be delivered by station porters within a radius of four miles at two and one-half cents apiece. Trains are in charge of a guard. Tickets are punched when passengers pass through the wicket on the platform and given up when passing out at destination. All tickets are good for stop-overs at most stations within the limits of expiration date, all that is necessary being to show your ticket to the collector at the wicket and pass out.

Special platform tickets are issued at one cent to each to accommodate those coming with or meeting friends In that way they take advantage, in a financial sense at least, of the feelings of the people, which in Japan lead them to appear in large numbers when their friends leave or when they wish to welcome someone coming. It is my own recollection that when I left Kure, the naval station, homeward bound, upwards of 100 appeared and lined up on the platform to say good-bye in their best English. It is considered a mark of very great disrespect in Japan not to go to the station to see your friends off.—Railway Age-Gazette.

TIT-BITS

How was It? — Some labourers were carrying planks from one place to another in a big timber yard. One was a big burly fellow, and there was also a very small man. The foreman coming around noticed the big fellow only carrying one plank while the other carried two. "How is it," said he, 'that you only bring one plank while that small chap there carries two?" "It's just this," said he without any concern, "yon mon's a bit too lazy for t'go twice."

Guid Advice.—A Scotsman went to London for a holiday. Walking alonv one of the streets he noticed a bald headed chemist standing at his shop door, and inquired if he had any hair-restorer. "Yes, sir," said the chemist. "Step inside, please. Here is an article I can highly recommend. It makes the hair grow in 24 hours." "Aweel," said the Scot, "ye can gie the top o' your heid a bit rub wi't, and I'll look back the morn and see if you're tellin' the truth."

Was it Good?—A short time ago an entertainment was given to the inmates of a lunatic asylum not far from Glasgow. One of the items on the programme consisted of a toy symphony upon toy instruments. When the symphony was over a clergyman who had taken part in it asked one of the inmates, "Well, Johnny, how did you like the music Was it good?" "Oh, weel, sir," said the loonie," "it's a guid thing that we're a' daft here."

ONLY HALF ARRANGED

Strachan. "And when's yer brither Rubbert gaun tae get mairrit, Duncan?" Duncan: "'Deed, an' it's ill tae say. Jeannie an' him's nae mair nor jist hauf arrangit about the gettin' mairrit." Strachan: "Hoots, whit wey hauf? There canna be ony hauf arrangements about gettin' mairrit."

Duncan: "Can there no? The wey o't is that he's wantin' tae get mairrit till her an' she's no' wantin' tae ger mairrit till him."—The Bailie.

THE LONG ROAD TO LONDON

The streets were only just beginning to wake to the life of the day. Peggy spoke to a girl who was setting open the door of a little shop: "Please will you tell me which is the road to London?" "London? Why, it's miles and miles away!" she said, staring. "Yes, I know," answered Peggy. "But I have a friend there, and I must get to him somehow. I've got no money ,so I must walk."

NO NEED FOR THEM

At a banquet held in a room, the walls of which were adorned with many beautiful paintings, a well-known college president was called upon to respond to a toast. In the course of his remarks, wishing to pay a compliment to the ladies present, and designating the paintings with one of his characteristic gestures, he said: "What need is there of these painted beauties when we have so many with us at this table?"

ASKING QUESTIONS

Little Johnnie was always asking questions. "You'd better keep still, or something will happen to you," his tired mother finally said to him. "Curiosity once killed a cat, you know." Johnnie was so impressed with this that he kept silent for three minutes. Then he said: "Mother, what did that cat want to know?"

A BRACE OF PROTESTS FROM A BRACE OF LADIES

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—We saw the police inspecting the bread this morning and it was an edifying sight. The work was thoroughly done, indeed. We do not think there was a loaf in that waggon that was not handled, and "handled" is the word, too, and it was also truly handled with mitts.

Oh, why, in a civilized country, are we compelled to eat bread which has been mauled and clawed and pawed by the woolen mitts of a police man, who, perhaps, with those same mitts, a short time before, handled some dirty, diseased old drunks!

Did you ever notice a man with mitts on, on a cold day, and the various purposes which the mitts serve? 'Nuf said!

We are glad we are being protected. We admire our fine-looking, big policemen. But, oh, would they kindly not handle our daily bread, with mitts!

Housewife.

Editor Examiner.

Dear Sir,—If I had a vote I'd vote for Mr. G. N. Gordon. I see that he is in favour of milk inspection. We should have milk inspected, and it would be an easy job. An Inspector with half an eye could "see through" a good deal of the milk supplied us. It sems to be Hydro-Electric milk. My boy attends the Collegiate, and says that Hydro means water. Our milk men get good prices, and have a very fine circle of self-protection formed; but I do not think it's a nice thing, in this land of plenty to have to pay at the rate of seven cents per quart—for water, even if it is diluted with milk. If our nice bachelor Medical Health Officer would be gallant enough to oblige us ladies and go water hunting among some of the milk tins, I think he would be in the swim by discovering water in larger proportions than occur in milk as it comes from the udder of the honest bossie.

Yours truly,
Housekeeper.

Band Brock St. Rink, Monday afternoon. Good ice.

THIS MAY CONCERN YOU

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I wish you would spare me a small space in your valuable paper. I wish to say a few words in regard to the sewer in the South End. I think the wrong man was put in as boss over the employees. The Council was very much astray when they put him in as boss. If they put a good, thorough-going man in it would be done in half the time, and for half the money. He don't know any more about the sewer than the sewer knows about him. He has about sixty men, off and on, working for him, some doing some work and others nothing. I cannot understand how they can work properly at 7 o'clock in the morning, owing to the lack of light. They should not start until 8 o'clock. He has done about four hundred yards, and it has cost an exceedingly high price—($34,000 or $35,000). I think it is about time they would change their boss. If they keep him much longer he will sink the town in debt. He had great presumption to accept a job that he did not know how to govern. It is going to make the taxes look up next summer. This is one lesson for our Council. I hope that when they choose a boss again they will choose a suitable one

A Bright, Happy and Pros... perous New Year To A...

1911 is all but gone. 1912 is all but here. We ...d on the threshold of a new year is being ushered i... To-day is a day of retrospection and optimism.

We examine critically the old year as it ... out slowly, and reluctantly. To us it has been ... of phenomenal growth. Every department throug... this great store has shown a marked increase. Not ... sales been greater---more customers served, and ...erage sales higher---but, our "STORE SERVICE" has become nearer perfection than ever before.

The BUYING END has been systematized to ensure securing the "NEW THINGS FIRST" and selling them at prices within reach of all. Our SALESPEOPLE are proficient to a high degree and constantly at your service. Our own DELIVERY SYSTEM enables us to deliver all parcels quickly and in perfect condition. The numerous SPECIAL DEPARTMENTS throughout the store supply a long felt want and add to the comfort and convenience of the buying public.

The new year offers us a wealth of brilliant possibilities. The increased prestige attained in 1911 combined with our improved facilities for "PERFECT STORE SERVICE" make us exceedingly enthusiastic and optimistic about the approaching year of 1912.

We predict it to be the "BANNER YEAR" ... great commercial enterprise. New departments ... inaugurated---other departments will be enlarged to ... the various wants of the people. In every particular ... are prepared to anticipate your demands and to supp... them to your lasting satisfaction.

In asking a continuance of your liberal patronage, we extend to you the Season's Greetings: "MAY YOU ENJOY ALL THE SUNSHINE AND HAPPINESS OF 1912 WITHOUT ITS SHADOWS AND SORROWS."

Gordon In Favour Of Hydro-Electric

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In certain quarters it has been said that I am not favourable to considering the Hydro-Electric Power question by the Council. I beg to say that if I am elected a member of the Council, I WILL SUPPORT THE HYDRO-ELECTRIC POLICY.

Since the Hon. Adam Beck has given his undertaking, on behalf of himself and the Ontario Government the ratepayers should not fail to pass the Hydro-Electric by-law on Monday.

No liability will be incurred by the City Council without a by-law authorizing an agreement being voted by the ratepayers . . . —

I strongly urge every ratepayer to vote favourably for the by-law on Monday, as it is the only course open to get cheap power for the City of Peterborough, and I pledge myself if elected, not to enter into any agreement unless a by-law, authorizing it, has been favourably voted on by the ratepayers.

Yours Truly,

Q. N. GORDON

MR. J. J. DUFFUS OUTLINES HIS CIVIC PLATFORM

Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—On account of the urgent requests of a very large number of all classes of citizens, I again present myself as a candidate for alderman and as such I desire to make known some of my views in regard to the future welfare of our city, the citizens in general, and particularly the West Ward.

Having been a member of the Board of Works, I feel that the outside portions of the different wards are to a certain extent neglected. For example Sherbrooke street west is in need of repairs and particularly in need of crossings. King street west, Thomas street, Bolivar street, William street and Pearl avenue, and in fact all that part of the city and vicinity formerly known as the Burnham property, which has been so well built up lately is deserving of the council's early attention in the way of grading, crossings, sewer and water service and some new extensions made.

EX-ALD. J. J. DUFFUS,

Also the north-west portion of the ward in the vicinity of Cedar, Elm, Donegal, Downie and Bonacord streets requires grading and general improvement. Numerous portions of the other different wards are also in need of similar attention. AFTER these outside and other districts receive the attention due them I would very much like to see a portion of George, Charlotte and Hunter streets with a permanent roadway, for the following reasons:

During the fall and spring and when wet weather prevails, owing to heavy traffic, these streets become filthy and are not in keeping with a progressive city. Furthermore, when the weather is dry, it is impossible to subdue the dust, and storekeepers cannot possibly keep their goods and premises as clean as they would desire, and I am of the opinion, that due to this, myriads of germs must inevitably find their way into the stores and thence to the homes of the people. This nuisance can only be abated by the application of tons and tons of water which, together with the traffic, cut up our streets and leave them in perpetual need of repair, and thus our money is wasted. Moreover, this portion of the city is frequented by ladies and their children, while the former are doing their necessary shopping, and they, as well as the hundreds of clerks and others employed in the stores are subject to the inconvenience of mud in the wet weather, dust in the dry weather and germs at all times.

Owing to its proximity to the many popular summer resorts of this district, Peterborough is visited by thousands of strangers during the summer and the absence of pavements on our roads is a poor advertisement and creates an impression of a lack of progress, which is not in keeping with our flourishing city.

I would like to see the city acquire some land suitable for new industries, particularly in the southern portion of the city, which is so conveniently intersected by both railways, and also so convenient to the Trent Canal.

I am strongly of the opinion that in order to make the necessary progress, we must inaugurate a different plan in order to obtain our share of new industries. Our city is admirably situated and cheap power must come our way. We possess more natural facilities than other cities and towns in Canada. Our education system is second to none, and altogether, our city should appeal to strangers who are seeking a new home, either for the purpose of living retired, obtaining employment or a location for a new industry.

What we need is co-operation from all classes of people, the Board of Trade and the Council. With sufficient amount of the right kind of public spiritedness manifesting itself, each doing their part, our city will surely grow, and we may look forward for a greater Peterborough.

If elected, I will do my utmost to put these views into effect.

Yours sincerely,

JOS. J. DUFFUS.

NOTHING TO LOSE IN PASSING THE BY-LAW

Sir,—Having read certain advertisements against this by-law, and also having listened to the address of the Hon. Adam Beck, I am satisfied that there is nothing to lose and much probably to be gained by passing this by-law.

Mr. Beck clearly showed there is no financial risk involved for us, and that it was reasonable before undertaking preliminary work on our behalf, that the Commission should, by this vote, be assured of the interest and support of our people.

Surely we don't want to be at the mercy of a monopoly which evidently sees that the Commission's proposed scheme, by reducing the cost of electricity, will curb the private monopoly and help the whole body of the people. The reputation of our city is at stak.

Yours truly,
CITIZEN.

AX-GRINDING

A Science With Some Dealers—Done at the Expense of the Public

There is nothing "just as good" as Newbro's Herpicide. Some dealers will even go so far as to tell you they have something better.

That dealer has an axe to grind.

You can't stop his grinding, but you can prevent him grinding it at your expense.

There is one sure, swift way to do it.

Go where you can get what you ask for.

You won't be obliged to do this very often, as fortunately the majority of druggists are honest and conscientious.

Newbro's Herpicide has been so long and favourably known as the original dandruff germ destroyer that no one should be deceived.

When you need a hair remedy, you don't want one which merely promises to kill the dandruff germ and prevent the hair from falling.

You want one that will do it.

Herpicide does it.

The hair becomes soft and lustrous. There is life, snap and beauty where formerly the hair was dead, dull and brittle.

Newbro's Herpicide is sold and guaranteed by all druggists.

Applications of this wonderful prophylactic may be obtained at the best barber shops and hair dressing parlours.

Send ten cents in postage or silver to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich., for a nice sample of Herpicide and a booklet telling all about the hair.

Presentation To Organist

On the evening of December 27th the Fairview friends met at the home of Miss Agnes Fitzgerald and presented her with a purse and a handsome sum of money. The evening was spent in games, guessing contests and a programme consisting of music, readings, recitations and addresses. At the conclusion of the programme, Miss Olive Adams was called and read the following address, the presentation being made by Mr. J. Elliott.

Miss Agnes Fitzgerald:

Dear Friend,—As we have once more entered the Christmas season where friends are gathering together for social intercourse, and when the land seems ringing with good cheer, we would extend to you our best wishes for a very happy New Year.

As we remember how willingly you have helped us as our organist during the past summer we are deeply thankful to you for this assistance. We know that many times this help was given at considerable inconvenience to yourself, so we cannot help realising that you have endeavoured to extend the spirit of peace on earth and good will to men.

We ask you therefore to accept our Christmas gift, not as remuneration but as a token of our appreciation and with our heartiest thanks.

Signed on behalf of your Fairview friends:

Mr. John Elliott,
Miss Olive McAdams.

Miss Fitzgerald, although taken by surprise, replied in a very suitable manner.

Refreshments were then served.

SUDDEN DEATH OF MRS. JAMES MATCHETT

Tragic in its suddenness was the death of Mrs. James Matchett, which occurred this afternoon at the family residence, 138 Murray street.

The deceased, who had been indisposed for a couple of days, was apparently doing fairly well when Mr. Matchett returned to his work at noon. However, only a short time had elapsed before he was summoned to his home, where he was informed she had passed away. Death was due to bronchitis.

Mrs. Matchett was sixty-seven years of age and was born in Otonabee. She has now been a resident of the city for some eighteen years. In creed she was a Presbyterian and a constant attendant at St. Paul's church. Her death, coming so suddenly, was a severe shock to her relatives, who have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

She is survived by a sorrowing husband, two daughters, Mrs. J. Sharp, city, and Bessie at home, and one son, Mr. R. J. Matchett of Peterborough. Mrs. West, of Stewart street, is a sister, and a brother, Mr. D. P. McFarland, lives in California.

The funeral will take place on Monday. There will be a service at the house at 2 o'clock, after which the funeral cortege will proceed to the Little Lake cemetery for interment.

INJURED IN A RUNAWAY

A pacing horse, buggy and racing sulky figured in a furious runaway this afternoon. The outfit was in charge of William Donnelly, Millbrook, and was being driven around the city preparatory to shipping it to Port Hope. While proceeding up Aylmer street, at a leisurely pace, the horse suddenly took fright and made a bold dash for liberty. While turning the corner, at Hunter and Aylmer streets, the driver was thrown out, and sustained a severe shaking up. He was removed to Dr. Gallivan's, where his injuries, which were found to be slight, were attended to. The horse was captured while proceeding along Hunter street. No damage was done to the outfit.

A PRESENTATION

An interesting event took place at the home of Mr. Herbert Gerrish, Murray street, last night, when the employees of Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, where Mr. Gerrish is employed, waited upon him and presented him with half a dozen dining-room chairs and the following address:

Mr. H. C. Gerrish, City.

Dear Herbert,—During the past few days you have changed your single life to married life; so that a new era opens before you. You are assuming responsibilities, which are as old as the world, and began in the Garden of Eden.

We are gathered here to-night to celebrate the event, and add our sincere prayers that your journey through life may be smooth and harmonious, with good health and prosperity abundant.

As a token of the esteem in which you are held by your fellow-workers we would ask you to accept these chairs, not for their intrinsic value but as a token of good will and best wishes for your success and happiness.

Wishing Mrs. Gerrish and yourself a bright and happy New Year, we are,

Sincerely Yours,

An enjoyable time was spent, a feature of which was the incidental music supplied by an impromptu orchestra, selected from the employees. Mr. Gerrish was taken completely by surprise, but expressed his thanks in an eloquent speech.

WEDDING BELLS

LLOYD—DAWSON.

A very pretty wedding took place Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 26th, at 4 o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Dawson, 5th avenue, Lachine, when their youngest daughter, Edyth Marion, was united in marriage to Dr. Stewart J. Lloyd, professor in Alabama State University. The ceremony was performed by Rev. George A. McKinnen, pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked charming in her gown of white Royal satin and Spanish lace and carried a bouquet of white roses and lily of the valley, her tulle veil being held in place by a wreath of orange blossoms. She was attended by Miss Myrtle Greenly of Hastings, Ont., who was gowned in pale blue silk, wearing a white picture hat and carried a bouquet of pink carnations.

Worthy of mention were the two little flower girls, Edyth and Geraldine Clemens, of Bowmanville, Ont., nieces of the bride, who were dainty frocks of white silk, with blue sashes and poke bonnets, trimmed with blue ribbon and rosebuds, and carried baskets of Marguerites.

The groom was assisted by Mr Geo. H. Dawson, of Winnipeg, brother of the bride, Mrs. Finnie of Lachine, provided the music.

After the signing of the register, a dainty buffet lunch was served. The bridegroom's gift to the bride was a handsome silver purse, to the bridesmaid a bar of pearls and to each of the little flower girls a pearl crescent and to the best man a Masonic fob.

Dr. and Mrs. Lloyd left on the evening train to spend their honeymoon in Ottawa, New York and Washington, before taking up their residence in Alabama. The bride travelled in a navy blue tailored suit with hat to match and wearing ermine furs.

The many beautiful gifts testified to the esteem in which the bride was held.
